

Presence

by John Cantey Knight

Vast, a great sadness there is in memory that mocks men as we stand old, looking back at special places we remember lovingly: dear people who populated those times, gone; the places, so much bitterness without kiss or human touch.