

Cat

by Frederick Smock

The old cat crawled off to die he no longer hauled himself out of the high grass whenever we called for him we were no longer god or his god anyway
there was another voice in his head now we looked and looked for him but our voices did not carry to where he had gone