Revenue Shortfall Forces NKU To Make Budget Cuts

DIANE GOETZ
EDITOR

Due to cuts made by Governor Wallace Wilkinson, NKU will be forced to cut between $1 to $1.3 million out of this year's fiscal budget.

A projected $155 million revenue shortfall in Kentucky's budget has forced administrators to make cuts.

Thirty-seven percent of the total cuts made by Wilkinson are in higher education, according to Vice President for Administration Dennis Taulbee.

Each institution's cut will be determined from the full formula funding, according to Taulbee. The method for determining the cuts is in favor of NKU, he said.

University President Leon Boothe has instructed all of the vice presidents to get together and determine what areas can be cut, said Taulbee.

Right now, the university has frozen all new equipment purchases, all out-of-state and out-of-country travel. University officials have also asked every department what cuts can be made in their specific area.

The university has also frozen hiring for all vacant positions. All new hires must now be approved by President

Boothe, according to Taulbee.

Taulbee said right now the university doesn't know what areas will take budget cuts. It will take one to two months before the university makes any final decision.

At this point, the university does not know if budget cuts will delay library expansion or land acquisition, which were both approved in the 1990 Kentucky legislative session.

The budget cuts will not affect the construction in the residential life village or Fine Arts building, said Taulbee.

"We (the university) anticipated the economic shortfall and that cuts would be made in higher education," Taulbee said.

However, the university did not plan for the state to cut so much out of higher education, according to Taulbee. Kentucky universities face a $31.6 million total reduction in state funding. Each university will have to cut a different amount.

The university intends to look at all programs for budget cuts, said Taulbee, but their primary concern is educational instruction for the remainder of the school year.

Tug-of-War Continues Over Alumni Center

MICHAEL BUNZEL
NEWS EDITOR

NKU is running out of options that might save the Alumni-Reception Center from being destroyed.

Dave Rowe, owner of the development firm Regency Group, submitted a proposal to the university that would move the house farther down Nunn Drive.

Rowe said his proposal was to renovate the house so he could move his firm to a new location. Plus, he would sign a lease with the university for the new spot.

"I was prepared to move it immediately," Rowe said. "...I'm ready and willing to move the building."

University officials stated in late August it was willing to listen to any offers that might make the house profitable. Now the university does not see Rowe's proposal as a viable option.

School officials want the house moved totally off campus, not just down Nunn

Drive, said Jim Alford, executive director of the NKU foundation.

"We're not interested in moving the house down about 700 or 800 feet," he said. "It just doesn't fit in with our development plans."

The university is still looking into a proposal from Thriftway Supermarket to lease the two-acres of land the house

NKU in 1970, said, she is somewhat frustrated by NKU's new position on the house.

"We have this person (Rowe) who can move it, renovate it and use it, plus generate money for the university, but they now seem to be balking," she said. "We really hate to give it up now because we can save it and make it profitable for house and Thriftway's proposal. Thriftway officials would not comment on any particulars of the proposal.

But before that decision can be made NKU has to seek a zoning change with the city of Highland Heights, Alford said.

"Thriftway would not enter into a lease with us until they are assured of proper zoning," he said.

Right now all of Nunn Drive is zoned a single family area, but the school is trying to change it to a general commercial zone, he said.

"Our site plan calls for a hotel to be built on Nunn Drive," Alford said.

This new stance has Lange somewhat upset but she said, she will not give up her efforts to save the house.

"I am definitely not going to give up."

Alford said he looks to the buildings on campus as being much more important to the heritage of the university than the Pompilio house.

Professor Makes Mark On International Politics

MICHAEL BUNZEL

Being mentioned in a foreign government's debate on how to improve its criminal justice system is not something that happens everyday.

But for NKU sociology professor Robert Lilly, that is exactly what happened.

Lilly was recently quoted in England's House of Commons parliamentary debates on criminal justice.

The reason for such an achievement is Lilly's ten years of work with electronic monitoring and house arrest.

England, like the United States, is facing an increasing problem of overcrowding prisons, he said. They are looking for alternatives other than building new prisons.

"It's an outstanding achievement at being recognized as an expert in this country and his field and we (NKU) are proud of his achievement," said Provost David Jorns.

Electronic monitoring works by the criminal wearing either an anklet or wristband that would send a signal to a transmitter hooked to the telephone. The person is called at random, after which they have 15 seconds to call back and verify that they are home.

Lilly said he has visited over 12 countries and has been a part of four international conferences on the subject. "(Electronic monitoring has become a) $30-40 million international business," he said.

"I wanted to come up with a humane alternative to sending people to prison," he said. "An alternative that would be approaching both the left and right ideologies."

"Prisons are expensive and seldom produce long-range conformity," he added. "This is a unique alternative to this problem."

The benefit of electronic monitoring is to keep the individual at home where he can be with his family, hold a job, and still pay taxes, Lilly said. This further takes the pressure off state legislatures to maintain jails.

There is a question as to which criminals should be allowed to use this system. An example of a criminal being able to use it would be an elderly person accused of murdering his or her spouse, Lilly said. Also, murder is the most unlikely form of crime to be repeated.

Frank Cullen, professor of criminal justice at the University of Cincinnati, said Lilly's work has made an important contribution in the field.

"He has made an important contribution to the academic field of criminology but also to the policy-makers who are considering whether or not to adopt these systems in both the United States and in England," he said.

"These issues are very complex and what he does is show the potential benefits, but also show the potential problems, both practically and effectiveness," Cullen added. "And in this sense his work has been on the cutting edge in the area of house arrest and electronic monitoring."

Judge Thomas Creates Controversy

SG Adopts Resolution

DIANE GOETZ
EDITOR

Controversy surrounded a resolution passed in last week's Student Government meeting concerning Clarence Thomas.

When the resolution was brought to the assembly by SG Representatives at large Chuck McFall and Chris Kardux, SG members immediately began choosing sides and arguing their points to the assembly.

The controversy comes out of whether or not SG should concern itself with such matters, said SG President David Stringer.

According to Stringer, the resolution would call for SG to write a letter to the Senate Judiciary Committee requesting that an investigation be made into the leak that caused Anita Hill to testify.

The original resolution, read as follows: "A resolution relating to Senate Judiciary Committee Ethics Investigation. Whereas; in the process of higher education, ethics play an important role. Whereas; once having made the endeavor for an education. And Whereas; once having received an education and become a contributing member of the American society one would hope that the trust of the American Senate would hold such a contributing member in honor; Be it therefore resolved that the Student Government of Northern Kentucky University request an F.B.I. investigation be made into the source resulted in the public humiliation of Clarence Thomas and that this request be made to Senator Joe Biden, Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The assembly added Anita Hill to the resolution stating that she too suffered humiliation from the hearings.

The resolution passed 9-8 in the assembly.

SG Rep-at-large Brian Taylor is concerned about this issue because he thinks SG has no right to tell the Senate Judiciary Committee how to conduct it's business.

"It's types of actions like this that makes SG look like a Mickey Mouse organization," said Taylor. "It gives the student body a bad impression of SG."

"I feel that the Executive Council should veto this resolution as it is not representative of the student population," he added.

Speech Team Off To A Good Start

STAFF REPORT

Northern's Speech Team captured nine awards at last week's Owensboro College Speech Tournament.

In a press release, Durell Hamm, director of forensics, said six of nine participating members took top honors.

Michelle Deeley, a senior, placed first in rhetorical criticism, second in impromptu speaking and third in extemporaneous speaking.

Julie Goodrich, also a senior, placed fourth in prose and seventh in poetry.

Brian Taylor, senior, won seventh place in extemporaneous speaking.

Elizabeth Villing, freshman, placed seventh in extemporaneous speaking.

Jeff Clair and Dustin Lecander, sophomores, placed eighth in duo interpretation.

The Speech Team's next tournament will take them to Marieta, Ohio on Nov. 9.

Communications Department Offers Scholarships

JULIE VENABLE

Northern Kentucky University's department of communications will soon be offering a four year scholarship to high school graduates of the Cincinnati Public School system.

NKU is one of three universities offering scholarships in conjunction with the Scripps Howard Foundation.

The Scripps Howard Foundation provided $2000 for each of the scholarships and the schools matches the amount, according to Michael Turney, chairman of the department of communications.

"It's flattering and exciting for the department that the Scripps Howard Foundation, a very prestigious national media organization, picked us as one of the schools to participate," Turney said.

According to Turney, the scholarship is renewable for up to four years as long as the student stays in the field of communications and maintains the appropriate grade point average.

The four recipients should be chosen near the end of January 1992, said Turney.

Debate: Split Views On A Woman's Right To Choose

Pro-Life

KELLI MILLIGAN
COPY EDITOR

My best friend, Nichole, goes to a university in northern Ohio. She and I have been through a lot together, but our friendship has passed all the tests it has been through.

We always kid around that there never was so troubled a beginning to so deep a friendship. We started off hating each other in grade school, became good friends in high school and became best friends in college. Now, even though we are quite a few miles apart, our friendship has remained solid and strong.

Once, several years back, Nichole told me that she had been adopted. At the time I really didn't know what that meant, but I grew to understand and accept it. Today, I cherish the fact that she was adopted. She was born in 1971, one year before the Roe vs. Wade decision allowed women to legally have abortions.

The fact that abortions were illegal in 1971 may have saved my best friend's life.

With Operation Rescue coming to Cincinnati and the swearing in of Judge Clarence Thomas as the next Supreme Court justice in the wake of sexual harassment charges, many people seem to be wondering what the future holds as far as women's rights are concerned. I being a woman, am also concerned about the future of women's rights.

However, I don't believe that the taking of an innocent life is a right that anyone should possess, because it is murder.

As most NKU students should know, anti-abortion groups (especially Operation Rescue) and pro-abortion groups had a showdown in Cincinnati over the weekend.

While I don't entirely agree with the tactics used by Operation Rescue (blocking entrances into clinics, Planned Parenthood, etc.), I do believe in what they stand for. They are trying to save an innocent child from an undeserved death.

I believe that if the mother's life is in danger an abortion may be necessary, but that is the only time. And no, not rape, simply because the child didn't do anything to be punished for, the rapist did.

Nowadays, I think it is more common for abortion to be used as a form of birth control more than anything else.

If a woman simply feels it is an inconvenient time for her to have a child, she can go down to the local clinic and dispose of the inconvenience. Also, if the sex of the child is unappealing, the baby can be killed and, well, better luck next time.

Of course, abortions are performed because of financial situations, such as those difficulties an unwed teenage mother may face. However, many parents who want to adopt children are willing to pay all the necessary hospital expenses.

Many will argue the fact that whether or not abortion is murder depends on when life actually begins. Until the proof is positive that life begins at conception, lawmakers should keep abortion legal.

Maybe so, maybe the question does simply boil down to an individual's beliefs. I believe that life begins at conception. Some may think I believe that because of my religion; I have been conditioned to believe it. No, I believed in the sanctity of life long before I found out the Catholic religion was against abortion.

Therefore, I believe that abortion is not a religious issue, it's not a woman's issue, it's a life issue. It shouldn't matter which side had more people show up at a certain rally for or against, or who was elected as the next Supreme Court justice. What should matter is what is right and what is wrong.

The taking of an innocent life is wrong and unjust. It's especially unfair to those who can't have children. These people wait for years just to have a child to love. It's sad to think of all the parents who yearn to have children having to deal with those who don't seem to care about how precious the gift of life is.

I often think of who those children may have turned out to be. I was born in 1972, therefore, a good number of people I would have grown up with are missing.

Maybe they would have been the ones to find a cure for cancer, or AIDS or maybe one would have just been a friend; maybe a best friend, like Nichole. I don't know what I would do without her.

Pro-Choice

DIANE GOETZ
EDITOR

I'll never forget the day that my little girl said 'mommy.' I swore that my 6-month-old child was a genius, destined to be the next Einstein.

I take tremendous pride in my daughter and the treasures she's added to my life. So, one may wonder why I am so disgusted with legislators wanting to take away the women's right to choose.

I can sum it up in one word - freedom. Now all you pro-lifers are saying 'what about the freedom of the child?' I have a simple scenario that can answer that question.

When you were in high school, did you ever drink alcoholic beverages? Were you legally old enough to do so? It hasn't been that long since I was in high school, so I remember how it is.

The simple truth is, making something illegal does not ensure that no one will commit this crime. Women will still find ways to get an abortion. Safe or unsafe. I would much rather see a woman live through an abortion than die having one.

Abortion is a touchy issue because of ethics. But, this is one's own personal choice. I don't believe the government has any right to preach ethics when the majority of those in public office practiced bad ethics just to win an election.

I have a difficult time understanding the Republican party's mentality. They preach that government should stay out of public schools, stay out of business and stay out of health care. But, they think they have every right to make a woman's choice for her.

I am in no way condoning abortion. I think many women use abortion as a way out. There are lots of people who would love to adopt a child. The long waiting lists prove that.

However, making abortion illegal will not solve the problem. It may leave pro-choice protesters with no where to picket on their Saturday afternoons, but it won't solve the problem.

The only people that will benefit from overturning Roe v. Wade (the federal case that made abortion legal and safe for women) are President Bush and all of the doctors who will perform abortions underground.

Those doctors will make a fortune. If a yuppie or a teenage girl wants an abortion, they will pay the price. Cost is not a concern.

It's a sad day when a U.S. President gets elected on the idea of taking away a woman's right. That sad day is today. I personally don't think abortion is the most ethical solution, but I don't believe government has any right to interfere with someone's own personal opinion and choice.

I keep wondering once the right to choose is taken away, what will be next? Will we not be able to choose our own careers? Will we not be able to purchase cigarettes? I seriously wonder what right will be the next to go.

Our government won't stop there. I can assure you of that. I thought I lived in a free democracy. One in which people of both sexes can make their own decisions.

I always hear pro-life men preach, 'what about the man's choice?' But, I don't think he's the one who has to carry the baby in his body for nine months. He isn't the one who misses work, school or has to completely re-route his life during pregnancy.

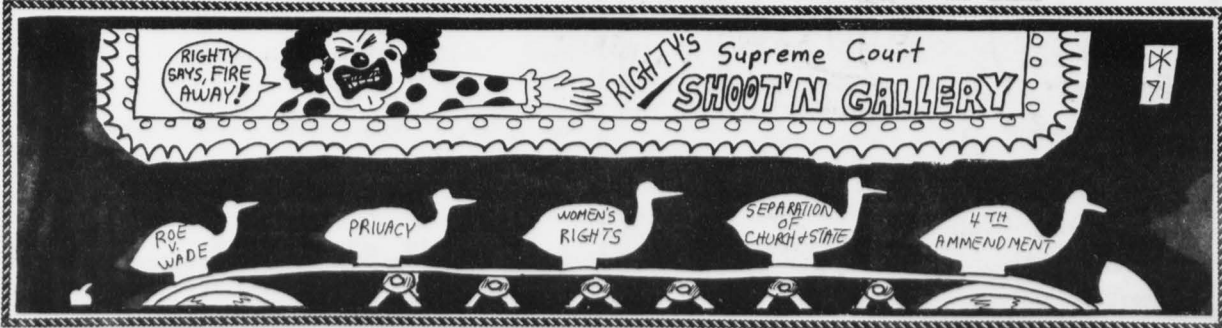

Men are lucky. All they have to do is show up for the conception of the child. They don't have to sacrifice their life for nine months. Women should have a much greater say in this issue than men.

Unfortunately, the majority of our legislators are men. So, they won't have a say in keeping it legal. I guess legislators and pro-life supporters think illegalizing something gets rid of it, but it doesn't.

Just ask a Kentucky marijuana farmer. He's not losing any money because it's illegal. As a matter of fact, he's probably making an even bigger profit.

If Republicans truly want to give children a chance to live, why don't they subsidize more child care, make education an easier option for single mothers and make good paying jobs more available to these single mothers who have to support those children.

As it stands right now, those people who support pro-life only care about a child from conception to birth. Once it's tossed out into society, they could care less about it.

Women, Men And Sexism: Looking For Answers

ANN ABBOTT
EXECUTIVE EDITOR

Sexism. It's a word that until a few weeks ago, few Americans could define. Now, in light of the recent Senate hearings, many people have formed their own opinions about what sexism is and/or is not.

Katherine Meyer, director of NKU's Women's Center, said the goal of the Center and women's studies programs is to help students understand the reasons that sexism exists, how it affects their lives, and how to deal with their own attitudes and opinions about sexism.

Sexism, Meyer explained, affects both women and men.

"We deal with how sexism affects men and women and how sexism interferes with the relationships between men and women," she said.

"People who come to our programs are really interested in changing their lives," she said. Different people are on different developmental levels and some people are not ready to give up sexism."

Meyers explained that sexism is something that people have been taught as a society, and people often fall into these established, often sexist roles as a way of coping with life.

"Men are not, in general, taught to be loving individuals. They are often sold a bill of goods - that they are supposed to be in power. Women are sold that they are supposed to be victims, and that they are supposed to be powerless," she said.

Women's studies are another way students can learn about dealing with sexism. NKU has had a women's studies program since 1978, but this is the first year that it has had its own offices (Natural Sciences 332).

Judith Bechtel, director of women's studies, emphasized the importance of women's studies for all students.

"The accomplishments of women and issues of women have been buried in a traditional curriculum. We don't realize this because we are used to it," she said.

She stressed that it is important to have courses that focus entirely on women's studies because the focus has been only on men's accomplishments and works for so long.

It's very important for men to become involved in women's studies, according to Bechtel.

"Most men don't realize how gender based their learning has been - they can't understand what women are saying. It takes a brave man to be willing to try to understand women's issues," she said.

Professor Art Slater said he agrees with the need for women's studies, and added that women's studies promotes a better understanding of minorities in general.

Slater teaches a new course entitled "Race and Gender in Society." He said that in this class students explore the effects of racism and sexism and how the two prejudices are related.

"Historically, women's rights, along with minorities rights, were excluded from the constitution. That translates into today's society continuing to see women as being second class citizens," Slater said.

"In the class we explore how to include people who have been historically excluded by the way we distribute our resources to go around."

Slater emphasized it is important for everyone, including white men, to take a good look at the problems of racism and sexism in society.

"In a few years, they (white males) will be the minority (in the work force)," said Slater.

Living On The Air In Cincinnati

WNKU Named Queen City's Best

TINA SHORT
STAFF WRITER

If Cincinnati Magazine is any judge, NKU houses one of the area's best radio stations for adults.

WNKU (89.7 FM), located in Landrum Academic Center, has been named "best" the magazine's 15th Annual "Best and Worst" issue.

Marijo Fraley, director of public relations and development for WNKU, said it's been fun for the station to get some public recognition.

"That's just a gift, it's not something you can campaign for," said Fraley.

Fraley was told by the magazine's managing editor that the station would appear in the magazine, but not under which category.

WNKU's format is a combination of traditional and contemporary folk music and news. Fraley said many people often think of folk music as groups such as Peter, Paul, and Mary or Bob Dylan, but the music played at the station is more current.

"Folk music is alive, it's being created in the 90's," said Fraley.

The station plays a mix of Latin, Cajun, Celtic, bluegrass and contemporary music.

"We very broadly define folk music," said Fraley.

Cincinnati Magazine noted that WNKU also offers "thoughtful programming, focusing on live news."

Among the programs the station has carried live are the investigations into the Exxon Valdez oil spill, Congress' debates on whether or not to go to war in the Persian Gulf, and this month's Senate debates on the confirmation of Clarence Thomas.

"It's news that is pretty heavy stuff," said Fraley. "Sometimes it's bags of air and sometimes it's eloquent and intelligent debates."

In addition to its regular broadcast of national and local news, the station also airs weekly commentaries by NKU President Leon Boothe and economics professor Marti Giesbrecht.

The station has been on the air for more than six years and operates in the form of public, not commercial, broadcasting. This means the station airs no formal advertising, but asks for pledges from its listeners in return for membership. Fraley said the station now has more than 1,500 members.

WNKU receives half its funding from the university and the remainder from proceeds of special events, businesses, the CPC (Corporation for Public Broadcasting), and membership pledges.

Career Expo '91: Plan For The Future Now

ANN ABBOTT
EXECUTIVE EDITOR

For students who are interested in joining the ranks of the gainfully employed after graduation, NKU's Career Development Center is offering some help along the way.

The Career Development Center and the Northern Kentucky Chamber of Commerce are co-sponsoring Career Awareness Week at NKU, Oct. 28 - Nov. 6.

Cooperative Education Coordinator Melanie Reinersman said that the purpose of Career Awareness Week is to "prepare students for participation in the Career Expo on Nov. 6."

Career Expo is "a chance for students to meet with over 50 employers and discuss job opportunities," she said.

"A lot of students don't even know how to walk up to the table at a career expo. They don't know how to get a conversation started."

Reinersman said that it is important for students to learn how to be relaxed and confident before they meet with potential employers.

"Don't be intimidated by meeting employers - think of it as an opportunity; we've opened the door of opportunity, students need to walk through and take advantage of it," she said.

Career Awareness week will give students the opportunity to find out what employees are looking for Reinersman said.

Local business people, along with the Career Development staff, will conduct the workshops offered during Career Awareness Week.

Reinersman stressed that the Career Expo is for students of any major, and of all classifications.

"The majors that Expo participants specified were diverse," said Reinersman. "They included, among many others, social sciences, criminal justice, chemistry, marketing, information systems, computer sciences," she said.

"It's not just for business students."

Students who are interested in participating in Career Awareness Week and the Career Expo can sign up in the Career Development Center, University Center room 320.

"The requirements to attend the Expo are professional dress and at least one resume, although we suggest that students bring more than one to hand to company representatives," Reinersman said.

"Students should realize that this is a relatively risk-free chance for them to speak with potential employers - you have nothing to lose. This is a safe way to learn how to interview," she added.

Reinersman said that Career Expo only happens once every two years at NKU, so anyone who plans to graduate in Fall 1992 or Spring 1993 should be sure to attend, along with students who are graduating this year.

Portrait Of A Drunken Driver

STACEY DURBIN
MANAGING EDITOR

He looks just like the guy who sits next to you in class.

He wears blue jeans and tennis shoes. He sits on the table, swings his legs and fumbles with a plastic coffee cup.

He doesn't have a stamp on his forehead or a sign taped to his back, but he said he feels everyone knows.

"When I used to go to church," said Steve Willis, "I would think everybody's looking at me saying, 'That's Steve. You read about him in the paper.'"

Willis, 24, of Louisville, was at NKU last week as part of Operation Sober.

Operation Sober is a program originating out of the Jefferson County Commonwealth Attorney's Office that presents the drinking and driving problem to college and high school students.

Willis served his five years of probation by giving talks to students through the Operation Sober program. For the past year and a half he has voluntarily given his time to the program.

Student Government Special Activities Chairperson Krista Wagner and Pi Kappa Alpha's Rob Morrison invited Willis and Prosecuting Attorney McKay Chauvin here as part of SG's Alcohol Awareness Week.

Chauvin told the student audience each time they receive a driving under the influence conviction the penalties worsen.

Under Kentucky's new law passed in July 1991, the first time a driver receives a DUI, he will lose his license for 90 days.

If the driver has an accident while under the influence, Chauvin said he can face various felonies. Examples of these are: criminal mischief, wanton endangerment, reckless homicide, manslaughter and murder.

When he was just 18, Willis had been drinking and driving when he was involved in an accident that killed a 21-year-old University of Louisville student.

Willis said that one night changed his life forever.

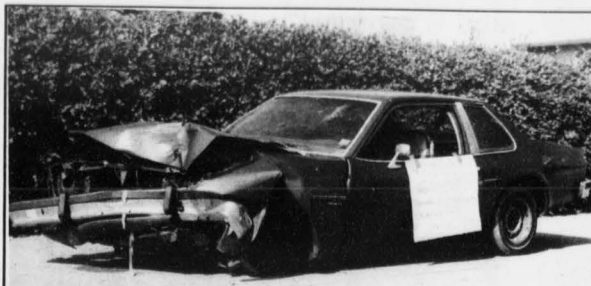

He spent 51 days in jail before being shock probated at the advice and consent of the victim's parents.

Willis said the victim's family felt he would be better off speaking to groups instead of in jail.

"It's (shock probation) not a right," he said. "It's a privilege."

He said he regrets the grief he put his family through.

"It cost my parents $22,000 in legal fees," Willis said. "My insurance went from $400 a year to $2,300 a year."

DUI Damage: A car involved in a drunken driving accident was part of SG's Alcohol Awareness week campaign. The car was parked on the University Center Plaza. Northerner photo by Julie Venable.

It cost Willis much more.

He had a chance to play football at a small college, but as a Class D felon on probation, he wasn't allowed to leave the county.

I felt like something was physically taken away from me and I didn't get it back, said Willis.

"It's a sentence forever."

Willis said he didn't volunteer in the Operation Sober program because he liked public speaking, he did it so someone else wouldn't have to face the same situation.

"When I leave here, if one of you listen to me, I'll feel better about myself."

Willis and Chauvin said they don't want to tell students not to drink. Their message is, "If you're going to drink, do not drive."

"Call a cab, your parents, your best friend," said Willis. "Just do not drive."

Willis said students may think, Yeah, right, call my parents? I would be in so much trouble!

"I thought the same thing, but if I had called them I would not be in near as much trouble as I was six and a half years ago," he said.

SG To YouIt's Been A Busy Week

Dear Students,

This week has been extremely interesting in terms of both national news and NKU presentations. I hope each of you followed the Senate hearings as they will have an effect on us for quite a few years more.

In addition, I hope you took advantage of the programs presented by Student Government during Alcohol Awareness Week. The programs were extremely informative and made many of us who attended think about the effect alcohol has on us every day of our lives. I would like to thank Krista Wagner and the Special Activities Committee for all of their work on these programs.

I would also like to inform each of you that I will be endorsing Representative Larry Hopkins for Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky. I would like to stress that this endorsement is my own and in no way reflects the opinion of NKU's Student Government. It is my understanding that the Student Government Presidents at Eastern and Western Kentucky Universities are joining me in this endorsement.

I hope each of you will vote in this year's governor's race as it will affect the future of the Commonwealth.

Thank you for your time and have a safe week.

Sincerely,
David A. Stringer

Student Supports Hopkins

Dear Editor:

U.S. Congressman Larry Hopkins has been in Congress for 13 years and before that in the Kentucky Legislature. I have known him for quite a few years and have known him to be a hard working and fair person. Hopkins has shown seven years of his financial records. He will be a great asset to the state of Kentucky as our governor.

We are in much need of a knowledgeable caring person and I think Larry Hopkins fills that bill. He devoted his life to the state and to the Congress. When Desert Storm was going on, he was on T.V. quite a few times telling us what was happening. In those trying times, it was nice to see a friendly congressman telling us what was going on. Vote for Larry Hopkins on Nov. 5.

Lady Norse Ranked Ninth In Nation

SCOTT COOK
SPORTS EDITOR

Preseason practice is only one week old and head coach Nancy Winstel's women's basketball team is already receiving national attention.

The team is ranked ninth in the Division II preseason poll according to NCAA Magazine.

Winstel is glad her team was mentioned in the poll, which was voted on by the writers of the magazine, but she doesn't put much stock in preseason polls.

"Polls are just meant to get people excited," Winstel said. "It's an honor that people think that highly in our program. If we are number nine, that remains to be seen."

Five of NKU's opponents are also mentioned in the poll making for a very tough schedule for Winstel's team.

"I'd would put our schedule against anyone's in the country," Winstel said.

"If you desire to be one of the best, you have to play the best," she said.

Winstel said she feels one of the keys to the success of the women's basketball program at NKU is the fact they have never been afraid to play a good team.

Last year the Lady Norse won the Great Lakes Valley Conference and advanced to the NCAA tournament. The team was defeated in the first round by Northern Michigan.

This year's team returns seven players from that squad, including four players who were predominantly starters.

Winstel said just because those four players started last year doesn't mean they will necessarily start again this year.

"I want all my players to think they have a chance to start," she said.

The biggest challenge Winstel faces this year is replacing last year's conference player of the year Christie Freppon. Freppon, who was a senior last year, averaged 18.7 points and 11.7 rebounds per game last year for the Lady Norse.

Winstel said somebody has to step up and fill in for Freppon's vacancy.

"We have experienced players coming I hope we can count of," Winstel said.

She is confident her players will step up and take on added responsibility.

"That's what being a team is all about," she said.

Volleyball Team Comes From Behind To Beat Indianapolis In GLVC Match

BRIAN BALLMAN
STAFF WRITER

After trailing by a game twice during the match, the NKU women's volleyball team came back and defeated the University of Indianapolis in five games last Thursday night.

The Lady Norse beat their conference opponent 11-15, 15-9, 13-15, 15-6, 15-11.

Indianapolis won the first game, but not without a battle with NKU.

The Lady Greyhounds had a 10-2 lead before the Lady Norse ran off three points in a row on the serve of sophomore Shawn Casey to cut the lead to 10-5.

Six plays later, after a kill by sophomore Peggy Ziegler forced a sideout, freshman Ann Hicks came up to serve for NKU.

The Lady Norse ran off six straight points to tie the game 11-11.

Indianapolis regrouped at that point and went on to win the game.

Although NKU lost the first game, coach Mary Biermann was impressed with the way the team came back.

"We started off quite sluggish, but after that I was pretty happy with the way we played," Biermann said.

With an 11-9 lead in the second game, freshman Stephanie Carle came up to serve for the Lady Norse. NKU won the final four points of the game on Carle's serve.

Senior Linda Schnetzer came up with a kill at game point to give the Lady Norse the game.

Schnetzer led NKU with 27 kills in the match.

Game three went back and forth with each team taking a turn in the lead. After a tie at 13-13, Indianapolis went on to win 15-13 and took a two games to one lead.

The fourth game started out close before NKU sophomore Tamara Ramer started the Lady Norse on a seven point run on her serve. NKU easily won the game 15-6 to even the match.

The fifth game of the match was played using the rally scoring system. In this system, a point is scored on every serve.

NKU had won two of its previous three games this season that had advanced to a fifth game this season.

The Lady Norse again had to play catch-up in this game. They trailed 5-1 in the game before coming back to tie it at 6-6.

Following an Indianapolis timeout, NKU won seven of the next nine points to put the game away. NKU won the final game 15-11.

Biermann was pleased with the team's performance in the rally.

Biermann said. "We've been able to win the big points when we had to."

The victory improved NKU's record to 8-14 overall and 2-5 in the Great Lakes Valley Conference.

Meier Likes The Challenge Her Job Presents

SCOTT COOK
SPORTS EDITOR

More money would make things easier for NKU's athletic programs, but their director likes the challenge she faces in playing the hand she's been dealt.

Jane Meier, NKU's athletic director, knows more money would not solve all the problems the athletic department faces, but it would make dealing with them easier.

"It takes more than money to get to the top. It makes it easier, but it doesn't guarantee success," she said.

Meier likes the challenge the job of athletic director presents.

"If you get into a job and you know what is coming next you get too comfortable. In here my blood boils, it's exciting," Meier said.

Meier was named director of intercollegiate athletics in August 1988, replacing Ed Thompson who resigned citing problems caused by the amount of money the university allocates for the athletic programs.

While the same problem still exists, Meier takes the problem in stride and makes the best of the resources she has to use.

"I look at what we get from Northern as a solid base, I wish we could get more, we ask for more, but it's not available," she said.

The athletic department's budget for 1991-92 is $837,647.

A large portion of this money goes for scholarships, the most important expense of the department according to Meier.

"If we don't have scholarship money, it is hard to remain competitive. If you don't have athletes you can't compete," Meier said.

In addition to the money from the university, the department depends on outside resources to supplement its expenses. The bulk of outside money comes from the Gold Club, the university's athletic booster group.

Meier said the Gold Club has generated $48,000 in donations through its fund raising campaign so far this year.

Meier said the money raised by the Gold Club is needed by the department for operating expenses.

The amount of money raised by the group is a gauge of the amount of community support behind the program.

"The last three years we've only had limited attention," Meier said of the community's support.

Meier said the limited attention given to the program is the result of NKU's location.

"It's been said this is a Division I community," she said. "It's tough to compete in this media market with a Division II school."

"I think being a Division II is unique. We have to sell that uniqueness," she said. When Meier looks into the future of NKU's athletic program, money comes up as a stumbling block.

Two of biggest talked about moves for the university's athletic program are the addition of a football team and the jump to Division I.

Meier said even though football has a natural attractiveness in the fall, she thinks a football team isn't in the best interest of the university.

"You can talk about it, but it wouldn't be a good move for us," she said.

Money is again the problem. It would take an amount equal to or larger than the current budget of the entire department to field a football team.

"There are a lot of people who talk about football, but I haven't seen anyone walk through the door with a million bucks," she said.

Funding also stands in the way of a university move into Division I.

"I'd love for the university to compete at Division I, but it takes resources," she said.

Resources the program doesn't have. The estimated cost for funding NKU's athletic program as a Division I school is around $3 million, more than three times the current budget.

Meier said she wishes the people who push for a jump to Division I would take the time to take a good look at Northern and compare it to any Division I program. NKU's athletic program is only 21-years-old, most Division I programs to be are three, four or five times as old as NKU's program.

Meier said she thinks the university will eventually move to Division I, but she doesn't think it will be anytime soon.

"I don't know if I'll see it in my lifetime," she said.

Meier's goal for the programs is for them to build with what they currently have.

"We need to be as competitive as we can with the resources we have," she said. "Let us grow."

Lewis Forfeits Soccer Games

Great Lakes Valley Conference member Lewis University announced last week that it is forfeiting the first 12 games of the 1991 season because they used an ineligible player.

The announcement determined the number one seed in the conference tournament, scheduled to begin next week.

Lewis defeated Kentucky Wesleyan,

Southern Indiana, Indianapolis and Indiana/Purdue at Ft. Wayne.

By virtue of the forfeited game, Kentucky Wesleyan became the number one seed in the GLVC tournament.

NKU was in the running for the number one seed before the announcement, however because Ky. Wesleyan defeated NKU, the Panthers are the number one seed.
