Fee Increase To Benefit General Fund

MICHAEL BUNZEL
NEWS EDITOR

NKU President Leon Boothe made a late decision to put the additional money from a student incidental fees increase into the school's general fund.

When NKU officials proposed the increase, from $55 to $110 a semester, to Student Government on Jan. 13, it was proposed that the additional money would go towards several areas of support.

But with an impending budget cut ready to be levied to higher education, Boothe felt it was in the best interests of the school to have this additional money go into the general fund to help cover the loss in state revenues.

The decision was influenced by the

NKU Budget To Be Cut Again

Gov. Jones Will Announce Higher Education Cut At Feb. 6 State of the Commonwealth Address

NKU officials are sitting in an uneasy state of anticipation as they wait to see just how much the school's budget will be cut.

Last Tuesday in a closed door session, university presidents from the eight state-funded universities met with Gov. Brereton Jones and his Cabinet Secretary Kevin Hable to hear how much higher education can expect to be cut.

In an article published last week in The Courier-Journal, some unidentified sources who attended that meeting said the cut would range from 5 to 7 percent.

Gov. Jones will propose his budget for the 1992-93 year to the General Assembly on Feb. 6.

With the state facing a $250 million to $400 million shortfall in its budget, every state agency was asked to prepare budgets for an impending cut.

According to Elzie Barker, NKU's director of budget, this could cost the university in the neighborhood of $1.3 million to $2 million.

But that percentage is a low figure and possibly the best case scenario in terms of cuts, Barker said.

It was reported two weeks ago the cuts could range from 10 to 15 percent, costing NKU between $2.5 million to $3.7 million. Right now no one knows exactly how much the cut will be, he said.

With so many differing views on how large the cut will be, Barker said, he is not sure just where the university will make cuts.

"It is almost impossible to plan to target for specific areas to be cut," Barker said. "Until the governor's budget is introduced, we (NKU) can't really have our specific plan developed until then."

However, he said certain areas such as salary increases, class offerings and student financial aid all could be affected by the cut.

With a cut in state supported money, Barker said, revenues generated by tuition and fees do not fully cover the cost of the university in terms of providing costs for educational services.

With the cuts looming and no clear indication as to the size of the cuts, it was necessary to maintain as much flexibility as possible to meet the needs of the university.

impending budget cut higher education is going to receive this fiscal year.

Boothe made his decision after he, along with the other state funded university presidents, met with the governor's staff last Tuesday and were told the news of a cut.

Boothe announced the change in the recommendation during last Wednesday's Board of Regents meeting.

Boothe said he felt bad about the decision but said he felt it was necessary

NKU's Black History Month Celebration Is For Everyone

LORI WILSON
STAFF WRITER

NKU will be doing some celebrating throughout February.

February is National Black History Month and according to Teretha Prioleau, assistant to the dean of African-American student affairs, there is an array of events for all students, faculty and staff to enjoy.

"The month long celebration will begin this week by honoring Malcolm X, a national spokesman for Black Muslims," said Prioleau.

She said during the rest of February, planned activities will honor particular areas of African-American achievement such as politics, religion, the armed forces, education, technology, business, the arts and African-American women.

Some of those activities include a black history film series, a fashion show, guest speakers, and diversity workshops and discussions. A gospel extravaganza will conclude the celebration Feb. 29.

"The African-American Student Affairs, Black United Students and several other campus organizations worked together in organizing and planning Black History Month," said Prioleau.

"We expect a good turnout for the celebration because many organizations were involved and the events are set at varying campus locations."

Delores Anderson, special assistant to the president for affirmative action and multi-cultural affairs and one of the key organizers of this year's celebration, said she agreed with Prioleau's expectations.

"Black History Month is for all to share and celebrate the contributions of African-Americans to this country."

Anderson also said she hopes not only African-Americans take part and said she feels all students should particularly be interested in the film "Ethnic Notions."

"It is a wonderful exploration of our society's ethnic stereotypes and how we deal with them on a daily basis," she said.

"The diversity workshops and discussions are also events we hope to get most students to participate in," Prioleau added.

"Carter Wilson, a black historian, created Black History Month to highlight the achievements of blacks in history," she said. "I hope to help carry on that tradition at Northern."

This year's Black History Month has most of its emphasis on African-American achievements, but Anderson said next year it will have a more historical perspective.

Author Answers Questions On Sexual Harassment

KAREN MCGLOONE
STAFF WRITER

Author Billie Wright Dziech last Thursday told about 60 NKU students and faculty members sexual harassment can occur in many unnoticeable ways.

The assistant to the dean and professor of language and arts at the University of Cincinnati told the audience since the Clarence Thomas hearings she has been quite popular.

Dziech is now lecturing widely on the subject that made Thomas and Anita Hill famous.

She said at the time she co-wrote "The Lecherous Professor" in 1984 she felt she knew everything there was to know about sexual harassment on college campuses.

"There were the perpetrators and the victims, and I felt that the only people really guilty were the perpetrators," she said. "But I don't believe that anymore."

The outcome of the Thomas hearings made her rethink the whole issue of sexual harassment. She said she now believes "victims are people who allow themselves to be victims."

"Sexual harassment is an act of power," Dziech said. "Victims have power too, but they learn a sense of powerlessness when

Sexual Harassment

What If It Happens At NKU?

KAREN MCGLOONE
STAFF WRITER

We may have seen it happen on the television series "The Paper Chase." We may even know someone who is facing it now. But does sexual harassment actually exist on our campus? That is a good question to ask, but a complicated one to answer.

Sexual Harassment Awareness Week began last Monday in the UC Theatre with Delores Anderson's speech "What Is Sexual Harassment?"

"NKU is required by law to have its environment free from sexual harassment," said Anderson, special assistant to the president for affirmative action and multi-cultural affairs.

"Sexual harassment of an individual is often times not very obvious," she said. "It can include a lot of things besides physical contact such as sexually offensive comments, being treated in a manner that is different from other students, or just being asked to do anything that you feel uncomfortable doing."

Anderson said most incidents of sexual harassment on campus are not easily resolved because of a student's respect for a professor's knowledge and authority.

"Most students who are being harassed try to cope with the offensive behavior themselves," she said. "This can make students feel that they are the ones who have done something wrong."

Norleen Pomerantz, assistant vice president for student development, ended faced with sexual harassment."

Men as well as women can be victims, she said. Men can identify with the harasser in an academic environment, observe derogatory remarks, and sympathize with the victims sitting next to them.

"Sexual harassment isn't just stripping off clothes," she said. "It is not a battle between sexes. It is a battle of behavior."

Dziech said the No. 1 response to sexual harassment is to avoid or ignore the harasser. But avoiding it means lost work hours, changed majors or dropping out of school.

"Unless the victim does something about it — it will only get worse," she said. "There is nothing heroic about avoiding sexual harassment."

"The students (at UC) just don't trust us," she said, when it comes to reporting sexual harassment on campus.

"We get less than three formal complaints a year," she said. "Sexual harassment happens on campuses all over because students just don't tell."

Dziech said she believes taking responsibility means telling someone who is designated to think about these things.

"We need to resist the passivity that the week by telling students the procedures for reporting sexual harassment at NKU.

She said sexual harassment is a legal term with a legal definition and encouraged students to be aware of its terms.

"If you have any doubts about those terms, then the first thing you have to do is talk to someone."

"Faculty members have an ethical obligation to treat students in an ethical way," she said. "Students must get it out of their minds that a faculty member's inappropriate behavior towards them is their fault."

Pomerantz emphasized students do not need to confront the faculty member themselves.

"I can take that level of discomfort away from the student."

"When someone comes to me, I give them the full procedures and go over them step by step," she said. "I talk to the faculty member to see if it can be resolved. If it can't, and if the student still wants to proceed with the charge, then an official report is written and delivered to Delores (Anderson), where it becomes an official report."

Pomerantz also said students should not be afraid of retribution from the offender.

"Once the charge is on a faculty member's record, it makes it much more difficult for that faculty member to retaliate," she said. "It puts the faculty member on notice that his behavior is being watched."

stops victims from coming forward," she said. "We need to recognize that males and females are going to have to live together in a world that is not like the world I was growing up in."

"In today's society, we like to talk about horrible things. I think that its (society's) love affair with victimization is a very fatal attraction."

In addition to "The Lecherous Professor," Dziech also co-wrote the book "On Trial" in 1989, which discusses America's court system and its treatment of sexually abused children.

Let's Stick To The Truly Important Issues

DIANE GOETZ
EDITOR

Can anyone tell me the important issues surrounding this upcoming presidential campaign? If you can't think of at least three or if the word infidelity came rushing into your mind, then you are in bad shape.

Americans are brainwashed into believing that personal issues are the main issues in a political race.

Just look at the way the American public is reacting to Gennifer Flowers' story about Democratic presidential candidate Bill Clinton. This woman has already gotten paid more than six figures to tell her story to Star Magazine.

Now Star is such a good source of truth and honesty. Do you people actually believe everything that's printed in those check-out stand fiction (because I refuse to call this publication actual news) rags?

Even if the story is true, should it really hinder a qualified candidate from running for president? Do we expect our leaders to be above us? And, if they are too far above us, how can they represent us? Many men and women cheat on their spouses.

If throughout history our elected officials had been elected on the basis of fidelity, we'd gone without President's like Jefferson and Kennedy. Those are not the important issues.

I'm certainly not excusing the behavior, but should others look down on someone who has done this? Why is it okay when your best buddy cheats on his/her spouse (or boyfriend/girlfriend), but it's not okay for others to do the same?

I, for one, do not believe Flowers' story. I think it was an easy way to make some extra income. If someone were paying you about $130,000 to say you'd slept with Bill Clinton, would you do it? What if you had a failing singing career? Would you do it then?

I'm sure most everyone has answered no to these questions, but we really don't know the circumstances surrounding her decision to tell this story. So, you either believe him or her.

It's amazing to me how many Americans believe a woman when they claim to have affairs with public officials, but when a woman comes forward who claims to be raped (like the woman who pressed charges against Mike Tyson) the public does not believe her. If anyone can answer this puzzling question, I would love to know.

I think it is ironic how a story like this surfaces when Clinton began to pick up momentum on his campaign. It just seems too good to be true for his competitors of all political parties.

I can assure you that Flowers is not the only one benefiting from this story.

LET'S STICK TO THE ISSUES!

How many of you are afraid to get sick for lack of insurance? How many of you are afraid to graduate because you just know there are no jobs out there? How many of you have been laid off from your job within the last year? And, how many of you are sick of getting taxed to death when those people who make millions of dollars a year pay almost the same percentage in taxes every year?

These are the real issues that should be considered when people vote for a president next year. The issues of personal life are not as important as the others. Anyone believing that a candidate's personal life should have more bearing than issues doesn't realize the importance of a chief executive.

There are qualified candidates out there afraid of running for public office because they are afraid their entire lives will be put on public scrutiny. Sadly, this is what will happen.

How many of you are afraid of something in your past re-surfacing if you ran for public office? If there is something you don't want others to scrutinize about you, maybe you shouldn't judge another person's personal life.

I don't completely blame the public. I mean, let's face it, candidates do everything humanly possible to confuse you. They often keep voters out of the polls themselves.

It's a lot easier for an opponent to point a finger at someone's personal life rather than discuss the issues at hand. Who wants to talk about a recession and unemployment? It's a heck of a lot easier to say 'this man cheated on his wife, he may do the same to you.'

Don't get fooled by this. Educate yourselves on the truly important issues and vote accordingly.

Learning In and Out of School In Japan

Dear Editor,

What a great feeling to finally get off of that airplane, and then the reality of a new place strikes you in the face. What does that sign say? Why do I feel tall? And what did that lady just tell me to do to claim my luggage? There's no turning back now, welcome to Japan!

The travels in Japan can be talked about forever . . . In face, there are hundreds of travel and people photos to share, just ask! I will probably bore you with details, but Gifu, Japan, is not Cincinnati exactly, nor is Gifu University exactly like NKU.

When Dr. Harden, chairman of the department of technology, first mentioned the Mazak Scholarship opportunity, I could not believe I could possibly do it. I knew I need to "Think Globally, Act Locally" on world issues but this was my chance to go halfway around the world and act globally! Plus, the university was supporting the whole idea.

When asking for directions to the nearest bus stop I try to always mention I'm from Kentucky. This usually gets a smile and an expression in English about one of the favorite restaurants in Gifu- Kentucky Fried Chicken.

Gifu University is located about half an hour (by bus) north of Gifu City. An agricultural area by most Japanese standards, the community is very receptive to meeting and working with foreigners.

My housing at the Gifu University International House is very comfortable, plus surprisingly affordable when I visit other exchange students' apartments off-campus.

The university hosts students from Thailand, China, India, Bangladesh, Korea, Egypt, Iraq, Ghana and Brazil, for example. And since each floor of the building shared the kitchen facility there is always a wide variety of foods and smells. This is probably one of the best part... of this program; you realize there are parts of the world very, very different from NKU. So I guess I'm learning more than just textbook stuff. I hope that was part of the plan.

David Hunt

David Hunt is one of two students currently studying in Japan on the Mazak Scholarship. The office of international programs provided Hunt's letter to The Northerner.

Stringer Encourages Student Participation

Dear Students:

I have a few questions for students to ask themselves. Would you like to go to a university where people have no sense of community? How about one where people still go out with their high school friends and basically care about nothing outside of three counties? Would you like to be in a student governing organization in which people are more concerned about when the meeting will end than voicing their opinion and helping with service activities? The most disheartening thing about the answer to these questions is not just that you are already going to such a university, but things do not have to be this way. Student leaders need not become so discouraged that they no longer want to participate in anything at Northern because no one seems to care. The most tiring thing for people is not working on projects, it's having no one to participate in them.

I'm not asking everyone to spend forty extra hours a week at Northern. I'm not asking for parades or anything like that. All I'm asking is for students to let people know what events they'd like to see on campus and then come to these events. Show your care about this university. Come out to the basketball games. Come see the speakers, musical acts and various performers that come to Northern. Join a student organization- any student organization. Have a protest- ANYTHING! If you have any ideas or suggestions, contact me at 572-5190.

In terms of the student incidental fees, I am extremely sorry to report Northern is expecting significant budget cuts from the Commonwealth of Kentucky. As a result, money hoped to go to a new University Center will be put in the general fund for regular functions. There is still a commitment to a new University Center, but a guarantee cannot be made at this time. I believe cuts to higher education are ill-founded and would encourage anyone who would like to lobby for change to do so in Frankfort. If I can be of any help, contact me.

I thank each of you for your time and attention and, once again, I encourage you to make a difference at this university.

Sincerely,
David A. Stringer

Sexual Harassment: Do All Men Shoulder the Blame?

Dear Editor,

If we were sexually harassed, would you come right out and say something to someone, or would you wait? (How many years did it take Anita Hill?) This may be a male point of view, but I think you would put an end to it! Student Government's idea of a Sexual Harassment Awareness Week is great! However, I think daring men to participate in the events is not the way to do it.

When I saw the Perfect Male Co-worker/Boss cartoon (in the Jan. 29 edition of The Northerner), my first idea was to draw a picture of the Perfect Female Co-worker/Boss. Then I realized I would be just like you. However, my father raised me to have more respect for women. I would not draw an obnoxious, one-sided, stereotypical picture of them!

You're wrong when you say you are not "pointing a finger" at the "yes voting" U.S. Senators. I watched the hearings and never got the impression they were saying, "she is lying and this is not a problem out there." There is a problem! Wait . . . there isn't a problem, there are two problems. The first is definitely worse- sexual harassment. The second is women just like you who condemn men as a whole for this entire problem.

I, a man, will be at the events on campus during Sexual Harassment Awareness Week. Also, I will be looking for you, Diane Goetz, to see how often you attend. If not, I suppose you're just stereotyping all the men on campus.

So, to end this letter, I leave you with a question: Can you define sexual harassment?

Jessie B. Combs

P.S. I, for one, am not insensitive and uncaring to this issue.

Editor's note: The opinions expressed by the editorial cartoonists are those of the individual artist and do not necessarily reflect those of The Northerner.

Cancer Survivor Tells Her Story

DIANE GOETZ
EDITOR

Sitting on the table of the examination room, Mary did not suspect a thing. She always did what her doctor told her to do. So, when he told her to have a biopsy after her mammogram, she did and thought nothing of it. A few days later she got a call that would change her life.

"The first thing you think of when someone tells you that you have cancer is, 'who will take care of my babies?'"

"I am a firm believer in preventive medicine," Mary said. She said she regularly visited her doctor for check-ups.

"My age was 35 then," she said. "The doctor told me to have a mammogram, so I did."

"They found a calcification, and it was very minute," she continued. "It could not be felt in a normal examination."

She said the doctor told her these (calcifications) are usually nothing, but he sent her to have a biopsy.

"I went home after the biopsy and still thought nothing of it," Mary said.

When the doctor called, he very sadly and gently said, "we found cancer cells." That's when I lost it."

Mary and her husband went to the hospital to discuss treatments and to have additional tests.

The doctors had to do a complete breast removal, Mary said. They also removed 14 lymph nodes from under her arm.

"I was very relieved when the doctor told me that all 14 lymph nodes were clean," Mary said. "I was very fortunate."

"I had what is called a modified mastectomy," she said. "Those who have cancer very badly or it went undetected for many years, the doctors have to dig deep into the chest wall."

"So far, I have not had no chemotherapy or radiation treatment," she said. "Everyone has told me that someone must have been looking out for me because I was so lucky."

"It's been eight years since I had the surgery and I live a perfectly normal and healthy life," she said.

Mary is an executive at one of Cincinnati's largest corporations and attends school part-time on evenings and weekends.

"If it runs in someone's family, that person should be checked by the age of 30," Mary said.

She also said women should give themselves self-examinations. "Nobody knows your body like you do."

Mary said she believes that too many people think of only lumps as being a sign of having cancer.

"Women should also look for other signs. Any abnormalities to your breasts should be checked by a doctor."

There are women afraid to go to the doctor because they are afraid of what he or she will tell them, Mary said.

"Undetected cancer will only get worse," she said. "You've heard it before but it doesn't hit home until cancer has been pronounced on your own body. If you don't do it for yourself, get checked for the sake of your family."

Look for part two of this series -- Detection and Treatment -- in next week's issue.

Upward Bound:
Planning For The Future

STAFF REPORT

Each summer, NKU plays host to a number of conventions and workshops where junior and high school students stay on campus for a few days or sometimes even weeks. One of these groups is Upward Bound.

Upward Bound is a program that helps students achieve success in high school and plan and prepare these students for a college education.

This group works with students year-round. They provide services like counseling, tutoring, cultural/recreational activities and a six-week residential program each summer at Northern.

The office (located at 421 John's Hill Road) is currently accepting applications for tutor/counselor positions over the summer. The tutor/counselor (T/C) positions are live-in during the Summer Program at NKU.

T/C's are involved in coordinating social and recreational events, in working with the student council and they teach activity classes.

This year's program will take place from June 6 to July 17. The staff would need to move into the residence halls May 31 and orientation begins June 1.

NKU will host 45 high school students during this year's summer program. The high school students who participate in Upward Bound are from Newport, Holmes, Pendleton County, Owen County, Gallatin County and Carroll County.

"This organization keeps in touch with the students all year," said Lori Cooley, counselor for Upward Bound.

It is designed as a college preparatory program. Counselors help students with applications, financial aid and entrance tests, according to Cooley.

Some of the students are very bright, according to Cooley. They just don't have a lot of money.

Jonathan Trimble, a tutor/counselor from last year, said he learned just as much from the kids as they did from him. He said it was a rewarding experience that has led to other job opportunities for him.

Applications will be available Feb. 5 and are due Feb. 21.

Students Give View On Importance Of A Candidates Personal Life

MARY K. HENRY
STAFF WRITER

The following are responses to a non-scientific, random poll conducted by The Northerner. The Northerner asked NKU students: "Should a candidate's personal life be involved in a presidential campaign?"

It should because the guy could be, for example, an avid drinker in his personal life and it could very easily overlap into his professional responsibilities.

Rich Riedling, sophomore
I think it should. It gives you more of a depth about the person and what they're doing.

Nick King, freshman
It shouldn't. Their personal life should be set aside from business.

Crystal Hazelwood, sophomore

No, because I don't think their personal life has anything to do with how they will run the country.

Burgess Byrd, sophomore

To an extent yes. If he's going to make mistakes in his personal life he's going to make mistakes in his political life.

Bill Murray, sophomore

No. Would you want your personal life to determine if you get a job?

Scott Bavaro, sophomore
I don't think so. I just don't think it's right for their private lives to be exploited like this. People should vote based on their competence not on their personal life.

Robin Downard, senior
I don't think it should. What they do in their personal life is not going to affect the country.

Denise Brock, freshman
I think it should. His personal life reflects his personality and how he runs the office.

Bobbie Oaks, freshman

To an extent yes. You couldn't let a criminal in there and that's part of his personal life.

Bryce Stevens, sophomore

Yes, to judge his moral characteristics.

Ken Winingier, junior
Yes, the personal life should be brought in because it would dictate how the individual performs his duties as president.

Mark Regensburger, sophomore
I don't think so, no. It's their business. It doesn't have anything to do with how they're going to do in office.

Stacie Pischoff, freshman

Something to that extreme, (the Clinton and Flowers scandal) it should not be involved. It shouldn't sway the voter's opinion. At that point you are voting on prejudice.

Christian Vesper, non-degree

It depends if criminal activities are personal life (fraud, extortion, organized crime) but I don't think sexuality is a crime - unless it involves an unwilling participant.

Kim Hoffman, sophomore

Yes, because his personal life affects how he's going to run the United States. If he's very flamboyant about his affairs he may run the United States the same way.

Robert Smith, sophomore

Yes, because their values and the way that they have acted throughout life could affect the way they perform their duties. I think that anyone in a political office is subjecting themselves to personal evaluation relating to values.

Leslie Mills, freshman
Yes, it should because if you know a person's background you know a little about their past.

Stephanie Larkin, freshman

In some cases yes, in some no. They shouldn't have to tell about their personal life, but if they want to they can. It's up to them if they want to but they shouldn't have to.

T'sha Gilreath, sophomore

It can't do laundry or find you a date, but it can help you find more time for both.

Various Artists, Dali: The Endless Enigma, CORIOLIS

Michael Michalak
Editorial Assistant

Upon the phantasmic discovery of Dali's work, it seemed like some strangely familiar schematic of an inner life already completely understood, unspoken and well lived in. Saturated with sound and intensely personal, his paintings were the first real music I ever felt.

- Steve Roach

Over an hour of impressionistic music by some of the world's most well-known electronic musicians attempts to delve into the eyes of Surrealist artist Salvador Dali. Sound, like color and form, is able to communicate a message or emotion or unexplainable sensation in a way that words cannot. It is this phenomenon that makes Dali's The Endless Enigma successful in many areas.

As with any compilation, the artistic idiosyncrasies of each performer creates a diversity that may or may not appeal to the listener. From a musical and/or a sheer sonic standpoint, I found Michael Stearns' Tuna Fishing, and Robert Rich and Steve Roach's Birth of Liquid Desires and The Disintegration of the Persistence of Memory to be the most fulfilling.

The areas in which I felt dissatisfied were in those tracks which seemed to sacrifice musically, or as a great audio engineer put it, "It's hard to appreciate the magic when you know the magician's tricks." I felt that some of the synthesized sounds could have been done away with; it was the true musicality and simple sound montages that were most successful.

Overall, however, Dali: The Endless Enigma is a great CD. For those who are Dali fans or who are just really into their imaginations, this CD, a patty drop in the economic cauldron, is a good purchase.

"Fried Green Tomatoes" Will Please The Palate Of Most Moviegoers

HILARY J. BENDELE
STAFF WRITER

Refreshing, heartwarming and totally delicious is the perfect description of the film "Fried Green Tomatoes."

"Tomatoes" stars Kathy Bates as Evelyn Couch, an overweight, middle aged and unhappy wife.

Jessica Tandy plays Ninny Threadgoode, a friendly nursing home occupant.

These two women become best friends. Ninny tells Evelyn stories of her past. Evelyn takes the stories to heart and incorporates the strength portrayed in them to better herself and her marriage.

Ninny's stories are about Igdie Threadgoode (Mary Stuart Master-son) and Ruth Jamison (Mary-Louise Parker). Two unlikely best friends who owned and ran the Whistle Stop Cafe. The specialty of the house was fried green tomatoes.

Ruth is a God-fearing woman who is a wizard in the kitchen, and though Igdie doesn't know how to boil water, her boldness and independence help create a safe atmosphere at the Whistle Stop Cafe.

Igdie has always been close to her family's black seamstress, Sipsey (Cicely Tyson), and being so, grew up without prejudice, defying the Southern racial standards of the time. She serves blacks in the back of the cafe and this breach of Southern social etiquette gets her into a lot of trouble.

Ultimately, she is accused of murdering Ruth's abusive husband. In the end, her fate rests with one of the people who condemns her actions the most, the pompous, prejudice Reverend Scroggins.

The strength of friendship shown between Igdie and Ruth is enduring and heartbreaking. Their friendship parallels the bond formed between Evelyn and Ninny.

Evelyn gradually learns to change her self-doubting ways. With Evelyn's help, she begins to become her own person. No longer is she just her husband's wife - she takes control of her own life and earns her husband's respect.

"Fried Green Tomatoes" was based on the novel "Fried Green Tomatoes at the Whistle Stop Cafe" by Fannie Flagg. Both Tandy and Bates are Oscar winning actresses for "Driving Miss Daisy" and "Misery," respectively.

This, the duo's first movie together, is a must see. Take your best friend and plenty of tissue to wipe the tears of sadness and joy.

Speech Team Rakes In Honors At Indy

STAFF REPORT

The NKU Speech Team took third place overall honors at the Indianapolis 500 Forensic Tournament Jan. 15 at the University of Indianapolis.

The team beat 12 schools from Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana and Michigan, according to Forensic Director Durrell Hamm. Morehead State University and Indiana University were the only schools to beat Northern.

"We managed to achieve this with only six students," Hamm said.

While only three students broke into the final round of competition, all the students contributed to the school's sweepstakes points which determined the team's overall standing.

"Even though I did not make it to finals," said team member John Eubanks, "I was happy because we finished so high. It is a team project."

Individual winners include senior Michelle Deeley, who placed first in impromptu speaking, fourth in after-dinner speaking and rhetorical criticism and fifth in extemporaneous speaking.

Cary Vollengilgham, freshman, placed fifth in persuasive speaking while sophomore Ginny Baker placed sixth in informative speaking.

Other team members earning points were Jennifer Webb, John Eubanks and Burgess Byrd.

The team is currently practicing for its next tournament at George Mason University.

"This, coupled with our first place finish at Transylvania (University), makes me believe this may be the best team we have had at NKU," Hamm said.

Mock Trial Team Qualifies For Nationals

STAFF REPORT

NKU's undergraduate Mock Trial team is the first team to ever qualify for national competition, after winning the United States Regional Mock Trial Tournament Jan. 24-25.

The team will travel to Des Moines, Iowa, Feb. 22-23 to compete against some of the top college Mock Trial teams and have the opportunity of being the top team in the country.

NKU students playing defense lawyers were: Carol Robertson, Dave Kittrel and Brian Clayton.

Debbie Patterson-Dunn, Dottie Meier and Brian Clayton acted as prosecuting attorneys.

NKU's defendant was Keith Spengler and Deanna Shinkle played the victim in this hypothetical criminal case.

Karen Schultheis, a practicing attorney in Northern Kentucky, and Dennis O'Keefe, political science professor, were this year's team advisers.

Lady Norse Winning Streak Hits Eight Games

SCOTT COOK
SPORTS EDITOR

At the halfway point of its conference schedule the NKU women's basketball team finds itself in the midst of an eight game winning streak, but two games out of first place in the Great Lakes Valley Conference.

"We lost two games and dug ourselves a hole and now we're digging ourselves," Lady Norse coach Nancy Winstel said.

The two losses she is referring to are her team's losses to conference opponents Indianapolis and St. Joseph's in the first two conference games of the season.

The 0-2 start for the Lady Norse in the GLVC was the team's worst start ever in the conference.

Since that time, however, Winstel's team has won eight games in a row and moved into a tie for second place in the GLVC.

"We are on a roll from the standpoint that we've won eight games in a row, but we have to keep it up," Winstel said.

The Lady Norse entered play last week with a 10-5 record overall, 5-2 in the GLVC. The team defeated non-conference opponent Indiana University/Purdue University at Indianapolis and conference opponents IU/PU at Ft. Wayne and Ashland to improve its record to 13-5 overall and 7-2 in the GLVC.

The team's win last Thursday over 20th ranked IPFW was significant because it moved NKU into a tie for second place in the conference with IPFW, two games behind undefeated St. Joseph's.

Junior guard Gayanna Wohnhas led the Lady Norse against IPFW with a career-high 20 points.

"It's a real big game for us if we have any hopes of winning the conference or going to the (NCAA) tournament," Wohnhas said.

Against Ashland on Saturday, the Lady Norse defeated the Lady Eagles, 82-52.

Although the margin of victory was 30 points, Winstel wasn't entirely pleased with her team's performance, especially in the first half.

"The last couple of minutes of the first half we called a zone (defense) because we were standing around with our man to man and giving up too much inside," Winstel said.

The second half was a different story. The Lady Norse out scored Ashland 51-26 in the second half.

"I don't know if we were mentally fatigued or physically fatigued because we had three games in one week, but I told our girls that's no excuse," Winstel said.

"There are no excuses because if you start making excuses for yourself, you're never going to get better."

Getting better is something the Lady Norse have to keep doing if they hope to challenge for the GLVC title and earn a berth in the NCAA tournament.

"My goal is for us to keep trying to get better, that's what's frustrating when we come out and we're not ready to play," Winstel said.

This week the Lady Norse take the turn their into the second half of their conference schedule.

First up for NKU is Lewis University tomorrow night in Regents Hall.

The Lady Norse defeated Lewis 72-55 on January 11.

Then on Saturday the Lady Norse take on the sixth ranked St. Joseph's. The Lady Pumas defeated NKU 79-71 in the teams match up earlier this season.

Lady Norse Notes

--Senior center Amy Middleton is the team's leading scorer, averaging 14.9 points per game. She is also the team's leading rebounder.

--Four of the team's five losses this season have come against teams ranked in the top 10 of the NCAA Division II poll.

Inconsistency continues to plague the NKU men's basketball team.

The Norsemen were defeated by visiting Indiana University/Purdue University-Ft. Wayne 93-87 last Thursday night in Regents Hall. The loss was the second straight for NKU and dropped its record to 8-9 overall and 4-4 in the Great Lakes Valley Conference.

For those who have followed the Norsemen this season, their loss to IPFW must have seemed like a replay of past games this season. Time and time again the Norsemen have built large second half leads only to let their opponents back into the game.

This game was no different.

NKU led by nine points midway through the second half before the Mastodons went on a 16-2 run to regain the lead they would never relinquish again.

After IPFW head coach Andy Piazza was assessed a technical foul, NKU senior guard Deron Blasingame converted both technical foul shots to put the Norse ahead 72-63. For the next three minutes the Mastodon defense forced NKU into several turnovers and before you could say, "Here we go again," IPFW was ahead by five, 79-74.

NKU head coach Ken Shields said he felt that the IPFW defense was the key to the second-half comeback.

"I guess it was attributed to the fact they went to their half court type of trapping along with their press after baskets and we struggled a little bit with it," Shields said.

Shields noted even when NKU was able to beat the press, the Mastodon defense prevented it from getting the ball down low or running a set offense.

After losing a big lead in the second half against Kentucky State, Shields thought he might not have played enough people. He said he went to a 10 man rotation to try to prevent another second half lull by the Norsemen.

Even 10 men wasn't enough against an IPFW team that returned every player from a year ago. Twelve players played at least three minutes for the Mastodons and 10 managed to get into the scoring column. Piazza said he thought his team's depth was the key to its second-half run.

"We have a great group of kids, seven juniors and four seniors," Piazza said. "When it comes to crunch time they've got a lot of heart and they execute really well."

"All of a sudden they (NKU) were a little tired, they don't play as many kids as we do, and their three-point shots weren't falling."

Second Half Lull Dooms Norsemen

NKU Comeback Attempt Falls Short Against Eagles

ROCKY TYE
STAFF WRITER

Last weekend's games were billed as the most important home stand in NKU men's basketball history, if the Norsemen could win both games they could have been in first place in the Great Lakes Valley Conference.

But after blowing another second-half lead last Thursday against Indiana University/Purdue University-Ft. Wayne, Saturday's game against Ashland University was a chance to salvage some respectability, however the Norsemen didn't come through.

Ashland University defeated NKU 110-108. The loss was the third in a row for the Norsemen.

NKU trailed by five points at halftime, 54-49, but Ashland took control and built a 15 point lead with six minutes to play.

The Norsemen cut away at the lead and during the final minute of the game outscored the Eagles 13-4. During the run freshman guard Ryan Schrand hit two three-point field goals, including one that tied the game at 108-108.

On Ashland's next possession Bryan Richetto was fouled and made two free throws with 10 seconds left to give the Eagles a two-point lead.

NKU had one last chance to tie the game.

Nick Pangallo drove the length of the floor and in his attempt to get a shot off, Pangallo tried to drive between two defenders.

Pangallo started to fall and put up a shot. The officials didn't call a foul on the play and time ran out.

NKU coach Ken Shields thought they should have and protested the call to no avail.

But after the game Shields didn't blame the loss on the officials.

"The officiating didn't cost us the game, We're not experienced enough to win close ballgames," Shields said.

NKU's leading scorer in the game Todd Svoboda also said the officials couldn't be blamed.

"The officials were pretty questionable, especially since we were on our home floor, but you can't blame the loss on the officials," Svoboda said.

Svoboda led NKU with 24 points. He was 10 for 10 from the field for the game. David Marshall added 22 points for the Norsemen.

Richetto led Ashland with 18 points, and Junior center Jeff Little added 16 points.

The loss drops NKU to 8-10 overall, and 4-5 in the conference. The Norsemen now are in seventh place in the GLVC.

at this time because the money from the fee increase would be the only additional funds the school would have.

Right now the funds are needed elsewhere and the school could not make the commitment it had originally planned to do, he said.

Elzie Barker, NKU's director of budget, said the school had kept its doors and options open.

"With the cuts looming and no clear indication as to the size of the cuts, it was necessary to maintain as much flexibility as possible to meet the needs of the university," Barker said.

The original plan called for $20, from each student each semester, to be dedicated to the future expansion of the University Center.

The center was designed in the early 1980's to house about 5,000 students. Since then, NKU's enrollment has doubled and with the completion of the new residence halls this fall, NKU will house almost 1,000 on-campus students.

The University Center expansion is the area that Cynthia Dickens, vice-president for student affairs, is disappointed about.

"I'm very discouraged about getting an expansion for that building for the current biennium and the next biennium," she said.

If NKU is not awarded a new $28 million classroom building this biennium (1992-94), Dickens said the chances are even slimmer for getting state funds for the UC expansion.

The classroom building is among the state's top priorities to receive funding.

The rationale behind the plan to put some student money into the UC project was to show the state that the school and the students are committed to financing the debt service of the project.

Other areas of support the additional money would have gone toward were a satellite computing facility in Nunn Hall, an increase in money for operating budgets for instructional units, funds for selected fee-supported student activities and the elimination of some student service fees.

"These areas for consideration of funding under the original proposal are still on the table," Barker said. "They will continue to be seriously reviewed under the ongoing budget process."

"A substantial cut in state support could have the effect of having longer classes and fewer class sections," he said.

"It's a very serious situation," he said. "It's important to be aware that in this type of situation all areas could be affected."

Another cut could affect the continuing growth of the university, said Cynthia Dickens, vice-president of student affairs.

"Right now NKU does not have the support staff to keep up with the enrollment growth," she said.

As far as starting to limit the number of students who want to attend the university, Dickens said, she doesn't foresee putting limitations on just yet.

"It may be considered but it's impossible to implement caps that quickly," she said.

However, she added, the school can't keep adding students into classes, "because there are constraints to the physical size of the campus."

"We cannot continue to grow without resources— not just money, but parking, equipment, and faculty and staff," she said. "... NKU will have a difficult time of being a university of over 11,000 students. I don't see appreciable growth unless we (Kentucky) come out of the recession and the state provides us with revenue."

Area legislatures hate having to cut higher education again, but they feel it is unavoidable in light of the state's economic woes.

"Everybody is getting a bad deal," said Democratic Rep. Joseph Meyer of Kenton County. "It is not a happy time for us. It's frustrating we find ourselves in this condition."

It's hard to go through a cut like this, he said.

"But institutions who do go through it and make wise cuts will come out of it leaner and stronger," Meyer said.

Republican Rep. Arthur Schmidt, of Campbell County, said with everything being cut higher education cannot be exempt. The first priorities in the state budget are primary and secondary education with higher education coming next, he said.

"The No. 1 priority has to be primary and secondary because that's where the whole thing starts," he said.
