NKU Adopts Sexual Harrassment Policy

DIANE GOETZ
ASSISTANT MANAGING EDITOR

The Board of Regents passed a new sexual harassment policy on Oct. 31 enabling students to report their harassment incidents more easily.

In the past, the first step in a sexual harassment case was for the alleged victim to personally confront the faculty who the student believed was harassing them.

The new policy eliminates the initial confrontation between student and faculty members. Students who feel they are being harassed can go directly to Assistant Vice President of Student Development Norleen Pomerantz.

She decides whether or not the incident is considered sexual harassment.

If it is considered sexual harassment,

Student Development discusses the complaint with the individual faculty member.

"It seems to reason that many students would not come forward if they had to confront that faculty member, who may be a professor," said Michelle Deeley, Student Government president and student regent member.

"Students may fear for their grades or with the attitude that professor will have for them after being confronted. This would also apply in a campus work situation.

"The policy's procedure was changed to make it easier for students to come forward with their complaints," said Deeley.

The Office of Student Development will assist the student in the following ways:

- Provide the student with an explanation of NKU's internal sexual harassment policy, procedures and information on the student's rights.

- Obtain the information from the student on the specific nature of the complaint and evidence.

- Advise the student of the various options available after weighing the evidence.

- Help the student articulate how the alleged harassment has affected him/her academically, physically or personally.

- Assist the student in clarifying the resolution.

"The new policy deals more with change in procedure than actual policy," said Pomerantz.

Pomerantz said she has dealt with only two cases of sexual harassment over the last few years. She suspects the low number of reports stemmed from the old harassment procedure.

The policy was brought up by Amy Conrad, SG representative, at the Sept. 24 meeting of Student Government, where it was voted on and passed unanimously.

"After the facts were presented at the meeting, it seemed the student (being harassed) was being put in an awkward position," said Conrad.

"There are so many odds against them. They were afraid for their grades and the attitudes taken if the teacher continued," said Conrad.

The motion was passed with no opposition at the Regents meeting.

The new sexual harassment policy went into effect immediately after it passed during last Wednesday's Board of Regents meeting.

Board Of Regents Surplus Seven Acres For Possible Economic Development

HOLLY JO KOONS
EDITOR

NKU Board of Regents declared seven acres of land located on U.S. Highway 27 and Nunn Drive surplus during the Wednesday, Oct. 31 meeting.

The property was deemed surplus in order to transfer the land to The NKU Foundation, Inc., which will pursue the possibilities of commercial development.

Earlier this semester, Dennis Taulbee, acting vice president for administration, said the land would need to be deemed suitable for development before the university would surplus the land.

Sasaki Associates Inc., of Watertown, Mass., has been working closely with the university to answer the question concerning the suitability of the land for economic endeavors.

University officials have acknowledged various commercial developments are being considered for the seven acres of land, including a hotel.

However, NKU President Leon Boothe said the Alumni Center, which is presently located on the surplus land, would be replaced before commercial development begins.

In other business, the NKU Board of Regents appointed Mark G. Arnzen, a Covington attorney, to a four-year term as a new regent. Arnzen replaces lawyer Philip Taliaferro.

The board also authorized the naming of the university baseball field as "Friendship Field."

In 1988, Northern Kentucky businessmen made substantial contributions to the university for the development and upgrading of the baseball field.

According to Boothe, through these contributions and institutional resources, the university was able to rework the playing surface, install new fencing and build a seating deck for the baseball field.

In recognition of the local businessmen, the Board of Regents voted to name the baseball field "Friendship Field."

Other business included the discussion of the following university projects:

- Quest Engineering of Lexington has nearly completed design work on the data network which will connect the Applied Science and Technology Center with the computing equipment housed in the Administrative Center. The project should be complete by June 1, 1991.

Meanwhile, work is also being done to extend a fiber optic backbone and install riser cables in other campus buildings in order to connect all the facilities in the future.

- Design for the Fine Arts Center construction, with a projected total cost of $7.4 million, is nearly complete. The addition will wrap around the north and east facades of the existing building, creating a new campus entrance in this area.

The building will provide new instructional and performance spaces for the Department of Music and a concert hall with 650 seats. Modifications to the Fine Arts Center will also be made.

Construction on the project is anticipated to begin in February 1991 and will take approximately 16 months to complete.

- Godsey Associates were appointed as the architect for the $9.1 million Steely Library expansion.

- Proposals for new residence halls to house 600 students were received by the state on Aug. 31. The Board of Regents voted to accept the lowest and best bids received.

According to facts presented at the meeting, upon proposal acceptance, the Commonwealth will execute a 20-year lease agreement for the land upon which the residence hall complex will be constructed.

The next NKU Board of Regents meeting will be held on Jan. 30, 1991.

Minority Visitation Day Successful

HOLLY JO KOONS
EDITOR

Minority Student Collegiate Visitation Day, which was held on Oct. 28 and 29, attracted 115 prospective students to visit NKU's campus, said Greg Stewart, director of the Office of Admissions.

According to Stewart, visitation days are one of the most successful ways to bring potential students to NKU and familiarize them with campus life.

Teretha Prioleau, director of Minority Affairs, said this year's Minority Student Collegiate Visitation Day was one of the most successful.

The Minority Student Collegiate Visitation Day is held once a year. Last year, Prioleau said, five students chose to attend Northern because of the weekend visit.

"If only a few students choose to attend Northern because of the efforts made during the campus visitation, then it has been worth it," said Prioleau.

During the visitation days, students were given campus tours. Six different tour groups were made available for students to focus on the departments in which they were most interested.

Sessions were also conducted and booths were set up for students to inquire about general information.

Minority Enrollment Growing

HOLLY JO KOONS
EDITOR

Minority enrollment has excelled this year with a 22 percent increase over last year's percentage, said Greg Stewart, director of the Office of Admissions.

According to Stewart, NKU campus visitation days for prospective students has played a major role in attracting students to the campus.

However, said Stewart, there is still a lot to be done. A total of 155 Afro-American students are presently enrolled at Northern. This is less than 2 percent of the total number of students attending Northern.

By 1995, NKU is expected to have .1 percent of minority students from the state of Kentucky enrolled at Northern.

Master's Degree In Nursing Approved By Board of Regents

NORTHERNER STAFF REPORT

NKU officials hope to offer a master's degree in the nursing program in fall 1991.

The program, approved by the NKU Board of Regents Oct. 31, will allow registered nurses with an associate's degree to earn a master's of science in nursing (MSN).

"They will not have to have a bachelor's degree to enter the MSN program," said John Johnson, dean of the College of Professional Studies.

Johnson said two needs prompted the university to develop the program.

"We found out there are many nurses, working in area hospitals, doctor's offices and clinics, who wanted to go to graduate school, but it was unavailable to them," Johnson said.

The University of Kentucky offers the only nursing master's program in the state. Although graduate students could enroll in UK's program through a special program at NKU, they still must travel to Lexington to complete residency or clinical assignment.

"They just can't uproot and move to Lexington," Johnson said. "Most of them have jobs and family here."

The University of Cincinnati also offers a master's program, but Kentucky residents must pay out-of-state tuition.

Johnson also said there is an increased demand for master's degree nurses in two areas, critical care and administration; therefore, NKU's master's curricula will offer two tracks.

The first track will be clinical, dealing with the new high technology of critical care nursing.

Johnson explained today's hospital patients are "sicker" than those of the past. Due to high insurance and health care costs, patients are not placed in the hospital for long periods unless it is absolutely necessary.

Johnson said the clinical track will deal with the increasingly complex technology used to treat these patients.

The second track will be nursing administration. Johnson said university research identified this as a high-demand area of nursing.

Johnson said if students attend the program full time, including summers, it will take two calendar years to complete the program.

However, Johnson said most students will keep their jobs while pursuing their degrees part time. It will take nursing students several years to complete the degree in this fashion.

Johnson also noted Northern Kentucky, since it is the state's second largest metropolitan area with the second largest number of health care facilities, is a good area for students to obtain their nursing master's degree.

"We have a lot of demand, but we also have a lot of training opportunities," he said.

The Council of Higher Education must still approve the program before it can be implemented. The council is scheduled to consider the program in January.

Speech Team Excels Despite Experience

FRED SORINO
STAFF WRITER

NKU's Speech Team is enjoying success this year; not because of exceptional talent, an experienced team, or easy tournaments, but because of hard work and dedication.

The speech team has competed in three tournaments this year, and they have received 15 individual awards by seven members.

They placed eighth overall in the Ottenbein College Speech Tournament.

Karen Slawter, assistant speech coach, said she's not surprised by their success.

"The team has been working hard this year," Slawter said. "They have a lot of potential, and it's beginning to show through their hard work and dedication."

According to Michelle Deeley, the team's top-ranking varsity member, the team's success has a lot to do with the coaching.

"In the past the coaches didn't have enough time to give the team the attention it needed to be successful," said Deeley.

Deeley said the coaches (Head Coach Durrell Hamm and Assistant Coach Slawter) are working just as hard as the students this year.

"This year's coaches are as dedicated as the students," said Deeley. "The coaches are always there when we need them for advice and support."

Slawter agrees Hamm is a big part of the team's success.

"Durrell puts a lot of time in with the speech team," said Slawter. "Because of his hard work, the team has improved."

This year's team lacks experience. They have only four varsity members of the 21 member team. The rest are novice (first-year) members.

They make up for lack of experience with the number of members on the team.

"This year's team is much larger than the teams in the past," Slawter said.

Deeley agrees and feels with hard work and more tournaments the team will just keep getting better.

"The more tournaments we enter the better we will become," Deeley said. "With a team as young as ours, tournaments are so valuable because it's the best way to get experience, and that's our weakest point."

Deeley has not been surprised, but rather impressed, with the success of the novice members.

"I'm very happy with the way the novice members have worked and competed," said

A Look Back: Foundation Provides For Future

RICH BOEHNE
1980 STAFF WRITER

Providing for the future is the main objective of the NKU Foundation. In the years ahead the foundation hopes to supply the university with funds, buildings, and services that would be otherwise unobtainable through federal and state sources.

"What we like to do is play Santa Claus for the university," said Foundation president Dr. Ralph Tesseneer, also special assistant to President Dr. A. D. Albright.

In 1971 the NKU Foundation became a nonprofit, tax exempt corporation but remained pretty much dormant until Albright became president of the university, according to Tesseneer.

In essence, the foundation works with donations to the university by individuals and corporations. "Some gifts are designated for a certain purpose by the donor," said Tesseneer. "With others the board uses its discretion. But one thing is made clear, the money can only be used to benefit the university."

The foundation's pride and joy is currently a 67-acre tract of land between Three Mile Road and I-275 north of the campus. The master plan for the land calls for structures like a motel, restaurants, apartments and office buildings.

Nearly half of the $400,000 cost of the land has now been paid off and the foundation plans to pay the balance in the next two years, according to Tesseneer.

Developers will lease land from the foundation, in a designated number of years—usually 20 to 40—then the deed to the structure is turned over to the foundation.

"From there we lease out the building," explained Tesseneer. "The foundation uses the money for the university and the company gets a huge tax write-off."

In looking ahead to when Chase Law will be relocated to Nunn Hall, the foundation hopes to provide housing for the law students in apartments on foundation land.

"With programs like housing for law students in mind, we provide the university with a service it would find difficult to supply for itself," said Tesseneer.

In the working is an information package for developers. According to Tesseneer, the foundation is now receiving some firm proposals from developers.

"I have people calling me wanting to go right now, but we have to be careful and consistent with the master plan."

Concerning the years ahead Tesseneer said, "I'll probably never see some of the things we are talking about now. But I'll tell you one thing for sure. In a hundred years the university will be here, and it will be needing funds."

Use The Right Door, Please

LESLIE C. FARRIS
NEWS EDITOR

Winter is just around the corner. Very soon all university buildings will be supplied with the heat needed to keep NKU students, staff and faculty comfortable.

There is a very important point we all need to remember about that heat—it costs money and fossil fuel. Everyone at NKU needs to be aware they can do something very simple to stop wasting money and fossil fuel.

When entering a building, a person without handicaps does not need to use the automatic door openers. When the little red button is pushed, two doors open for approximately 20 seconds. It takes a person without disabilities three seconds or less to make it through the doors, leaving the doors open much longer than needed.

This is wasteful on many levels. First, the outside door and "barrier door" are opened at the same time. This allows all of the cold air that's outside to come inside for about 17 seconds.

This makes the heating units work harder. More energy is consumed, and more fossil fuels are needed somewhere in the process.

Also, an unnecessary amount of energy is expended to hold the door open. It takes electricity to operate those doors. Remember, electricity costs money and fossil fuels.

In the end, the mechanism will also wear out earlier, need repair and be shut down for a period of time. This would be an unnecessary repair, and it may deny access to students with disabilities.

So, all NKU students and personnel must remember the automatic door mechanisms are not for their personal convenience. That bit of technology makes it possible for students with disabilities to have access to a college education.

Don't push that little red button unless you must. Grabbing a hold of the door handle and pulling will accomplish the same thing. It will also save the environment by conserving fossil fuels.

It will also save the university money; energy is large expense at any large institution. Any way the university can save money can help prevent tuition increases later.

Double doors and revolving doors are there for the purpose of saving energy costs. Automatic doors are there for the purpose of handicapped access. Let's make sure everything serves its purpose.

Student Parking Complaints Disputed

I occasionally experience episodes of prescience. When I heard that Student Government was sponsoring a Gripe Day, I was suddenly gripped by an uncontrollable urge to write the word "parking" on a sheet of paper. At the time it made no sense. But now that the results of Gripe Day are fully tabulated, I see that my prediction made perfect sense.

Unfortunately, clairvoyance is not needed to predict this particular result. It seems to be the standard student concern. It is a concern that I think is unsupportable on any grounds. It may actually be harmful to the development of the university.

The person who complains about the parking situation at NKU is obviously operating with limited experience of parking situations at other universities. The most possible spot in an NKU lot is probably better than most spots at larger universities. Moreover, the price of a spot at NKU is probably lower than most spots at other universities. In short, there is no parking problem.

The problem as I see it is as follows: students complain about parking, people who are concerned with student satisfaction hear these complaints, more parking lots get built. Now students can walk from their cars to classes in four minutes rather than six minutes. Responsibility for the parking lots rests largely with the complaining students. These same students must also take responsibility for other problems that were ignored so parking lots can be built.

I can only wonder what would happen if students started complaining about bonafide problems: the lack of adequate scientific instrumentation, a poor selection of periodicals in the library, a paucity of controversial outside speakers. Might we see some action on these issues?

With the freedom to gripe also comes responsibility. If you think that parking is indeed a major impediment to your university education, then by all means devote yourself to the parking issue. In the mornings you will definitely spend less time walking, but you may also be walking toward less.

Reader Questions Letter Writer

Dear Beth Johnson:

I saw in your Oct. 31 tirade against Scott Kappas the same illogical and misinformed rhetoric used by all pro-abortionists. The argument for a woman's "right to control her own body" is one of the sorriest attempts to justify something which is clearly unjustifiable.

You are also forgetting that the woman having the abortion is not the only person involved. When a woman has an abortion, she is not merely exercising control over her own body but extending that control over the body of an innocent, unborn child that she is carrying. I agree that women, like men, should have the right to control their own bodies but not the bodies of others.

So let me ask you one final question, Beth, "What gives you the right to decide whether or not a child can live or die?"

Charles DeMaris

Student Asks Reader to 'Lighten Up'

Dear Editor,

I urge Beth Johnson to "lighten up." While Scott Kappas did take a shot at the Young Democrats and the Democratic Party in general in the Oct. 17 Northerner, his letter should be read as mere political rhetoric, certainly not as a display of "total disregard for the rights of anyone but the white male of above average income." Beth Johnson is obviously very upset. She wants us all to know that "women are not breeding factories!" and that children deserve food at school, for example. OK, OK.

Having reread both letters it is clear that Kappas purposely stirred up a political debate only to be personally rebuked by Johnson, who is obviously on the other end of the political spectrum.

I agree with some, not all, of what both of these individuals believe. But where we disagree, let's keep our cool and stick to the issues. Please. Thank you.

Charles M. Dreyer

Lawn Pesticide Use Worries Reader

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to the article in the Oct. 24 issue of The Northerner titled "W.A.V.E. Addresses Environmental Concerns." I am very happy to see that the recycling issue has finally reached Northern, and I commend W.A.V.E. for the steps they are taking. However, something at Northern has concerned me in the past few weeks that no one seems to have addressed or noticed.

Walking to my car everyday, I have noticed in recent weeks little yellow caution signs placed all over the front of our campus. These signs are warnings not to walk in the grass because of pesticide treatments on the lawns. Maybe I am the only one who has noticed this, because the signs are very small. However, the smell is enough to give you a headache. The signs are yellow and have a picture of a person walking a dog with a big slash mark like the ones you see on "No Smoking" signs. Now it tends to make a person wonder exactly what is in the pesticide that one can't even walk through it.

Now I have noticed in my years at Northern that we have an abundant variety of birds that reside in the area. What is this pesticide going to do to the birds that land in the grass and search for food? For that matter, what is it doing to those students who miss or ignore the tiny signs and walk through the grass?

I guess my point is this. I commend the group W.A.V.E. for taking the steps to make a difference, and I commend them for their plans to clean up the Great Saltwater Cave in Rockcastle County, but perhaps they don't have to go that far to find an environmental hazard. Perhaps it's in their own backyard.

Students Invited to Political Debate

Dear Students,

Ideally, the Campus Republicans and Young Democrats wanted to have a debate before the elections. Unfortunately, we were so involved in our studies and campaigns that we could not get one together before Nov. 13. So on that day at 12 noon in the University Center Theatre, a debate will be conducted between the Republicans and Democrats. Fairness was taken into account in every way, and an invitation to attend is extended on both my and Brian Taylor's (Young Democrats' president) behalf. The issues discussed will be of domestic and foreign policy. Questions will be generated by a panel of professors and personnel chosen by both the Democrats and the Republicans. So come on out and support your party!!

On a personal note, I would like to thank Scott Kappas for all his assistance to me. Being new to college life, Scott allowed me to be involved actively by appointing me to Student Government last semester. He has also given me much needed advice on other issues. He has all my respect.

Chuck McFall

SG Accepts Book Grant Applications

Dear Students,

Student Government is now accepting applications for our merit-based book grants. The Scott C. Wurster and J. Scott Kappas Book Grants provide $100 to ten eligible students every semester. This money may be used by the recipient for the purchase of textbooks and course material from the NKU bookstore. The scholarship's primary funding is derived from the Aluminum Recycling Project and Student Book Exchange proceeds.

In order to be considered for this prestigious award, a student must fill out an application available in the SG offices (UC 208) by Nov. 30. The applications will be reviewed by the University Affairs Committee, NKU bookstore officials and the dean of students. The winners of awards will be notified before the end of exam week.

If you have any questions, please contact Christy Franzen at 572-5737.

SG will be sponsoring a "Parent's Day" on Nov. 17. For students who have children, we will have a "Turkey Fest" with activities for children from 12-2 p.m., following the Activities Programming Board's Children's Film Series. In addition, families will be able to use the health center between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Students can also nominate their parent(s) for "Outstanding Parent(s) of the Year." To do so, a student must write a 200-word or less essay on "Why my parent(s) should be Parent(s) of the Year." The essay must be submitted by 4 p.m. Nov. 14 in the dean of students' office.

A committee consisting of one student, one faculty member, the dean of students, and one representative from Student Development will select the winner and three honorable mentions. The winners will be announced on "Parent's Day" at 12:30 p.m.

If you have any questions, please call Rachel Klink, university affairs chairperson, at 572-5149.

Michelle Deeley, President of Student Government

Bizzard of Bucks Crowns A Winner

STEPHANIE HUNGLER
STAFF WRITER

What would you do for a chance at $500? All Mark Buerger had to do was fill out an entry ballot and have a lot of fun in the Blizzard of Bucks game show.

The game show, sponsored by the Student Activities Programming Board, made Buerger, an NKU broadcasting major, $205 richer.

The show had three rounds consisting of three games each to determine the winner.

The various games included contestants stuffing eight marshmallows into their mouths and saying, "Chubby Bunny," drinking juice out of a baby bottle while wearing bonnets and stacking wooden blocks while wearing oven mitts.

To be crowned Blizzard of Bucks champion and get the chance at the money booth, Buerger sat on balloons until they popped, carried balloons between his knees from one place to another and fished a piece of bubble gum out of a cream pie (using no hands) and blew a bubble with it.

Game show host Bob Schinker asked

Buerger for his thoughts after winning the cream pie stunt.

"I think this gum tastes awful, and I'm failing out of college," Buerger said.

At contest time Buerger was supposed to be taking a public relations class test, but he said, "If I get a chance at the money I can't worry about the test. I'm poor."

Buerger went into the money booth armed only with a money bag. Any money he caught, as air blew the bills around him, he could keep. He exited the booth with 125 dollar bills and $60 in larger bills.

"Citibank (Visa) and fraternity dues, that's where it's all going," said Buerger, after his total was announced.

Tim Mullins, Blizzard of Bucks winner two years ago, said, "Mark had good strategy in the money booth by trapping the money with his hands and arms. I tried to grab the money out of the air and that was hard to do with it blowing all around you."

Mullins' winnings also went to bills. "I got a speeding ticket a few days after I won the money," he said.

APB brought the Michigan-based game show to NKU for many reasons.

"We tried to find a show that would interest different age groups, not to mention that money is a big incentive for students," said Mary Chesnut, APB advisor.

"We know students always need extra money, and APB funding comes from students, so this is a way to give back to them," she said.

Adams Hopes To Prevent Future Wars

LESLIE C. FARRIS
NEWS EDITOR

By looking back at World War I in his new book, NKU history professor Michael C. C. Adams hopes he can help prevent future wars.

"My aim is to make war obsolete," Adams said. "I see it as one of the world's worst problems."

Adams' book, "The Great Adventure: Male Desire and the Coming of World War I," began showing up on bookstore shelves this month. It was published by Indiana University Press.

Adams is not new to the college publishing world. In 1978, Harvard University Press published his study of Union generals in the Civil War called "Our Masters the Rebels."

Adams is currently working on a World War II history for classroom use.

"I was requested by Johns Hopkins University Press to write the book," he said. "It's kind of nice to have a publisher ask you to write a book."

Adams was born in Derbyshire, England and raised in Nottinghamshire. He completed his undergraduate work in history at the University of Whales. He did his graduate work in American studies at the University of Sussex. Adams came to NKU in 1972.

"I really pursued an interest in popular culture," Adams said. "One of my main interests is the military and society, war and society and how countries make war."

Adams explained his interest in writing "The Great Adventure" can be traced back to his youth in England. He said there is a great difference between the way Americans and Europeans view World War I.

"Coming from England, I've always been appalled by World War I," Adams said. "To England and the rest of the European countries, it was an event that blighted the beginning of the century."

Michael C. C. Adams

Adams said when he was a boy, his family would travel to Hasland, England to visit relatives. His grandfather would take him to the town's park for ice cream, and there was a memorial with a statue of a World War I soldier, he said.

"It always frightened me when I was little," Adams said. "I thought it was a real, dead soldier they had marbled and put up there."

He said since that time he has remained troubled by World War I, especially since it was so destructive and brutal but came at a time of social progress.

He added the usual explanations, such as imperial rivalry between Germany and Britain, could not solve the whole problem.

"I became convinced the textbook explanations of the war couldn't explain it," Adams said. "I thought there had to be something less clear, less easily explainable."

Adams noted when war was declared in 1914 in Europe, people cheered.

"You're not supposed to cheer when you're about to have a blood bath," he said.

Such events led Adams to believe men of the time came to see war as a change from what was happening in their lives. His book explains the Industrial Revolution had increased materialism. He said war came to be viewed as an alternative to "the selfish world of peace."

"Rather than war being seen as a disease, peace was seen as the disease and war the cure," Adams said.

He added people needed to feel as if they were making a sacrifice for their fellow human beings.

"People need ideals. They need to feel like they're more than paychecks," he said.

Adams' book explains the changes of the industrial revolution also brought boredom and daily worry over bills, mortgages and children.

"Life, rather than being an adventure, had been reduced to a tedious grind," he said.

Adams said the book also points out life in the Industrial Revolution had taken away much of the people's individuality. War was a way of regaining some individuality, he explained.

"War, for men at least, has provided one of the few areas where they can be individuals," Adams said. "For in war, it's no longer 'Thou shalt not kill'; it becomes 'Kill as much as you like.'"

Adams noted many of Europe's World War I veterans, even though they risked life and separation from their families, later said the war was the best time of their lives. He said America's World War II veterans often have the same feeling.

"It's tragic, to me, that our society is so conformist that the only adventure we can find is in destruction," Adams said.

He said the book's final point is the causes of World War I were gender related. He said the Victorian culture had so sharply defined gender roles, men and women became alien and distant from each other.

Men at the time had strong comradeship with each other. They played games together, and war simply became an extension of that activity.

"Man-killing becomes the highest form of game, requiring the most skill, albeit a deadly one," Adams said.

"I think some resentment of women joining the armed services is that it's a sport with an exclusive male presence, and women would ruin it. I hope it does, because then we have a better chance of preventing wars."

Obermiller Works With The Local Cincinnati Inner-City Neighborhoods

RAY EGAN
STAFF WRITER

Phillip Obermiller, associate professor of sociology at NKU, has an added reason for excitement about his specialty area, working with Cincinnati's inner-city neighborhood cooperative.

Obermiller received a community service award on behalf of Cooperative Financial Services and Cincinnati Central Credit Union on Oct. 9 from the International Association of Cooperatives at the National Press Club in Washington, D.C.

The award was given to the firm and the credit union for their work in low-income Cincinnati neighborhoods.

"It happened so fast. I was told on a Friday, flown to Washington, D.C. on a Monday, accepted the award Tuesday morning and I was in Cincinnati that afternoon. It came as quite a surprise," said Obermiller, president of Cooperative Financial Services' board of trustees.

Obermiller explained the banks in these neighborhoods, left the inner-city, low-income neighborhoods to serve the higher-income, suburban areas, leaving the inner-city residents without any place to cash their checks.

"The people were having to go to check cashing places, which charge incredible fees to cash a check," Obermiller said.

The cooperative decided to get involved, and the neighborhood's residents formed their own cooperative to deliver banking services to this area.

The neighborhood cooperative contracted with the Cincinnati Central Credit Union, and the much-needed banking services were brought back to the area.

"Two years ago there were no banks in the area. Now there is an established branch with $850,000 in assets accompanied with 1,200 members," said Obermiller.

Besides working with the cooperative, Obermiller has been involved in other projects.

He served as local arrangements chair for the joint meetings of the Association for Humanist Sociology and the Society for Applied Sociology held Oct. 10-14 at the Cincinnati Terrace Hilton.

He has also chaired a paper session on social issues in low-income neighborhoods, and he organized a walking tour of Over-The-Rhine in Cincinnati.

"The field of sociology has so many dimensions. It is a utility for both academic and public issues. It can contribute to education in a liberal arts form and still be able to contribute on a community level at the same time," said Obermiller.

Obermiller said he enjoys the human relations side of sociology and probably enjoys sociology more now than when he first started because he now can see all the possibilities the field offers.

Obermiller is currently working on a paper involving the health status of children in Cincinnati neighborhoods a conference at the University of Kentucky.

Fallen Angels: A Delightful Comedy

HOLLY JO KOONS
EDITOR

Delightful from beginning to end, Fallen Angels, by Noel Coward, has certainly hit the top of this reviewer's list of plays performed by NKU's Theater Department.

Fallen Angels had only one fault: it ended too soon. This reviewer would have enjoyed another two hours of this play's great acting funny and heart-warming lines.

The play was so relaxing and enjoyable and the actors and actress did a terrific job portraying their characters. As a matter of fact, there could not have been a better choice of individuals starring in the performance.

From beginning to end, this reviewer laughed at the hilarious plot which consisted of the jealousy shown by two women as their long-time-ago, but never-forgotten-about lover came to town.

Both women, wrapped up in the memories of their past fling with the same man, become tactfully ruthless telling each others husbands about the other one's affair.

However, in the end, they pull their forces together in order to make their husbands believe it was a practical joke to make them jealous.

The audience seemed to love this play and this reviewer did too.

The play has proved to be one of my favorites presented by the NKU Theatre Department. If you missed this one, you really missed a special one.

Other plays to catch in the future are The Cherry Orchard, by Anton Chekhov, from Nov. 29 to Dec. 2 and Dec. 4 to Dec. 8; Our Town, by Thornton Wilder, from Feb. 21 to 24 and Feb. 26 to March 2; and Y.E.S. New Play Festival, from April 18 to 28.

Think of the six women closest to you.

Now guess
which one will be raped
this year.

One out of six college women will be sexually assaulted this year. But you can change the odds of it happening. Simply by trying to avoid situations that leave you or your friends vulnerable.

For starters, follow security measures. Don't prop residence hall doors open. Walk with a friend after dark. And be aware that date rape is a major problem on college campuses. With many of these rapes involving drinking.

Then share these facts with six of your friends. And maybe none of them will become another statistic.

Intense Annie Levens Rebounds From Injury

JOHN REITMAN
STAFF WRITER

In anticipation of the new season awaiting the NKU Lady Norse basketball team, junior guard Annie Levens practices each day with unparalleled intensity.

Levens practices and plays at this level every day. But this season she has a special reason for such inspired play. This year Levens is healthy.

Toward the end of her freshman season, Levens missed a shot against Xavier University when, following her shot for an attempted stick-back, a Xavier opponent, also trying for a rebound, entangled her arm with the right arm of Levens.

Her right arm was pulled back behind her head and out of its socket. With two games remaining in her first college season Levens had, according to NKU athletic trainer Bob Bove, a chronically dislocated shoulder.

"Her arm just went limp," said Lady Norse head coach Nancy Winstel. "You could tell it was dislocated."

Levens refused to miss the final two games of the season and then played her entire sophomore season with the injury. "Sometimes athletes are their own worst enemy," Winstel said. "They want to play when maybe they shouldn't. She (Levens) always wants to play."

NKU's opposition would continually exploit Levens' injury by playing tight zones and laying off her, not only because she's so quick, but because they knew she could not hit the open jump shot, as she shot only 34.9 percent from the field last season.

"She was never, at any time, 100 percent," Winstel said. "She shot 57 percent from the free throw line. People would foul her intentionally to make her shoot free throws."

This type of dedication does not come without its price, however. "Every time I would go up for a rebound my shoulder would pop out," Levens said. "It hurt so much, you'd look down at my arm and it would be shaking."

Levens' game was also affected from a psychological aspect. She was tentative in driving to the basket and in battling for rebounds.

"I was afraid that someone was going to come underneath me and I would fall," she said.

Threat of serious injury finally led Levens to the realization surgery was needed.

"I thought I'd better get something done," she said, "or I'd be looking at arthritis later." According to Bove, degenerative arthritis could have been a reality for her as early as age 40.

During the off season Levens underwent surgery on the shoulder and now she said she feels better and can't wait for the season to start.

"I have (shooting) range, but it's not where I want it to be yet," Levens said. "I'm about 80 percent right now. In a couple of months I'll be back to 100 percent."

"I'm looking forward to seeing how Annie does offensively this year," Winstel said. "She is shooting the ball better than she ever has here. She is one of the quickest players in the conference."

Opposing defenses have always had to worry about laying off Levens because of her ability to drive to the basket, but this year, according to Levens, they are going to have to worry about laying back and giving her the uncontested jump shot as well.

"I'm confident you're not going to stop me if I can get a shot," Levens said.

"Now they (NKU's opponents) are going to have to worry about two aspects of Annie Levens instead of just one."

Campbell Hopes For Chance To Show He Can Play

MATT BOHMER
STAFF WRITER

When he tried out for NKU's basketball team as a walk-on, he didn't think he would make it. He was nervous, scared and intimidated. Jon Campbell now in his third year with the team, plays on scholarship and hopes he can get his chance to contribute.

At the tryouts, he realized he would have to raise his game to another level.

"The talent was so much better, and the style of play was so much different," he said. "I tried to relax and just play. I didn't try to do anything spectacular. I just shot the open shot when I had it."

He said he had a lot of support, and he felt it helped him when the times got difficult and his confidence level was down.

"The guys on the team that were already there told me to stick with it," Campbell said.

"My family was supportive too. They told me a lot of people would like to be in my spot and that this was something I always wanted to do (play college basketball)."

He also got support from Doug Pelfrey, a friend from high school. Pelfrey is now the kicker for University of Kentucky's football team and is also a walk-on.

"He was supportive," Campbell said. "We're on the same level because we're both walk-ons."

After the first season things fell into place a little bit. Coach Ken Shields told him in the summer he was going to receive a scholarship. He said he had a good time that first year and learned a lot.

"I knew the things I had to work on," he said. "I could work over the summer to try and get better."

Campbell is looking forward to this season and is hoping for his chance to show he can play.

Shields is implementing a new style of play this year of running and pressing and plans to go ten deep on his bench. Campbell is hoping to be one of those ten.

He feels he is solid in all aspects of the game but not outstanding in any one phase.

"I just try to do the best I can," he said.

To be successful this season, he feels the team needs to be more aggressive and get a total team effort. "Like a family," he said.

He feels they can use last year's disappointment to motivate them. When they play the teams who have more talent, he feels they need to try to bring their game up to the other team's level.

"We need to be patient," he said, "We need to take good shots and play good defense."

He said the team played hard every game last year, but inexperience caused their problems.

Campbell likes playing for Shields, because when playing against Highlands High School (then coached by Shields), Campbell's high school team never won.

"He's a good motivator," Campbell said. "He's friendly with the players, and he says we should be always trying to get better."

Campbell said the team's goals are to first improve upon last year's 7-21 record, win the GLVC and make it to the NCAA Division II tournament.

What are Campbell's personal goals? He just wants a chance to play and to show people what he can do.

Speech from page 3

Deeley. "They're placing in tournaments against tough and experienced teams. That's impressive considering it's their first year on the team." Although they're a young team, Slawter feels they can compete with the best.

"The team has competed against some real quality teams, and they've been able to keep up with them," said Slawter.

A lot of the team's success falls on the shoulders of Deeley, who has placed six times in five events.

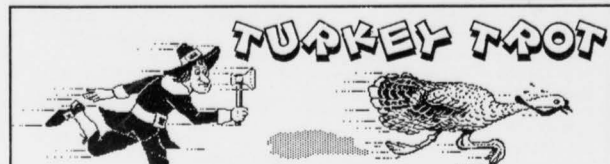

According to Slawter, Deeley is definitely a leader.

"Deeley leads the team with experience and by example," said Slawter. "Right now you could say she's the team's pride and joy."

Other members of the team who have placed in tournaments this year are: Dustin Lecander, David Kohl, Marian Henderson, Christy Fischer, Jeff Clare and Ernie Cunningham.

The speech team's next tournament will be Nov. 10 in Marietta, Ohio.
