Tuition Increase Expected For Fall 1992

MICHAEL BUNZEL
NEWS EDITOR

NKU's tuition is scheduled to increase by 3.1 percent next fall.

The Council on Higher Education, which sets the tuitions for all the universities in the state, will vote on that increase in October.

The council will also look at a 2.9 percent increase proposal for the 1993-94 year. In addition, it will look at whether or not any additional increases will be necessary for those years. A lack of state funds seems imminent in the near future for higher education institutions.

During the "Decision Makers '91" conference last week in Lexington, a panel of legislatures expressed a bleak outlook for state money available for higher education.

Chairman of the House Appropriations and Revenue Committee Joe Clark, one of the panelists, said most of the projected $200 million for the next biennial, 1992-94, will go toward the Kentucky Education Reform Act (KERA).

"We (the state) are committed to KERA and we're going to add $130 million to that, there's no way to avoid it," he said.

State employee pay raises and upgraded health insurance will seize most of the remaining money.

"Unless we can economize in other places, there's just no money available," Clark added. "We have to predict how much money is going to come to the state in the future."

"It's going to be very hard to predict that right now, especially with the economy being so sluggish," Clark said.

Since NKU's budget is basically dependent on two sources, 56 percent from the state and 35 percent from tuition and auxiliary enterprises, the school is looking at tuition to help fill the void left by lost state funds.

"When one source can't keep up with the growth and inflation, we have to look at the other source to pick up the slack," said Peter Hollister, vice president of University Relations and Development.

"There are very few years when tuition does not go up," he said. "The question is not if the tuition will go up, the question should be how much."

History Department May Have Found it's Chair

ANN ABBOTT

After two years, an election, a faculty vs. administration scuffle, a subsequent lawsuit, and a settlement of $43,000 plus, it looks like NKU's history and geography department may finally get it's chair.

The chair position, once the seat of little more than what one insider described as "chaos" now is said to be springing hope eternal. The administration, the faculty and the students say they have found someone they can all agree on as a suitable history department chair.

Dr. Thomas Hale, currently a professor of history at Idaho State University, is slated to be the next history chair.

Dr. John DeMarcus, chairperson of the committee that conducted the search for the history chair, explained a little about the search process.

"The faculty elected a committee and they in turn elected a chairperson for the committee. We met throughout the spring and summer. We advertised nationally, and had approximately 60-65 applicants," said DeMarcus.

"The president wanted someone by August. We could see by early spring that it would be nearly impossible for this to happen, because that person would have to walk off his or her current job to fill the position."

DeMarcus continued to explain that the committee was eventually able to narrow the choices down to six applicants, and of those six, the university decided on three to fly in for interviews.

Hale was one of those three.

"The candidates were interviewed by students, faculty and administration. The votes from all three groups were pretty much the same," explained DeMarcus.

Junior Lisa Barta, a history major at NKU, was appointed to a student committee to interview prospective chair candidates. She said she thought Hale was very qualified for the available position.

"I attended all three of the meetings (the interviews with the final candidates). It just seemed to me like he fit in better than the other two," she said.

"Dr. Hale was willing to work within the system. He seems like he would be there for us. He seems interested in what the students have to say," said Blank.

DeMarcus said that he agreed that Hale, a native Kentuckian, would be a suitable addition the history department.

His main concern is that the negotiations are successful.

"There are high hopes that this one will workout. There is real concern within the department."

DeMarcus said his concern over negotiations has to do with the longevity of the process.

The negotiations have been said to have been going on for an estimated four to eight weeks.

"If a decision isn't made in a couple of weeks, we will not have him in January, we will have to go until June. I am very hopeful that an agreement can be reached," said DeMarcus.

"This (that an agreement would be reached) is the implication I got from a memo from Dean Poole."

Dean Poole said he was, at present, in the process of negotiations with Hale, and that there was regular contact with him "by phone and mail."

"A contract has been offered to him," said Poole. "I am optimistic and hopeful he will accept."

If the contract fell through, Poole said that the process of searching would likely begin again - perhaps with some slight changes.

Expansion Planned To Meet Student Needs

TINA SHORT
STAFF WRITER

If approved, NKU may be constructing two new buildings and expanding another one.

In July, the university submitted its Biennial Capital Budget Request to the Council on Higher Education. The request prioritized the following:

No. 1- The construction of a ceramics and sculpture facility.

According to the budget request, this building would cost an estimated $1.5 million and would be funded through the State General Fund. It would be built between existing residence halls and the maintenance building. The estimated completion date is listed as January 1994.

No. 2- The construction of a new natural science building.

This project would cost an estimated $28 million and, according to the request, would be funded by a bond. The tentative construction site is the lawn area east of parking lot E. Completion is estimated to be August 1995.

No. 3- Expansion of the University Center.

Under the budget request, the University Center would increase by 82,000 gross sq. ft. and would cost an estimated $13 million. The project would also be funded by a bond. Initiating a student building fee to help repay 20-30 percent of the bond has been discussed. The estimated completion date is July 1995.

Director of Campus Planning Mary Paula Schuh said, the council is in the process of reviewing the budget requests of the state's eight publicly funded schools. Their recommendations will then go to the new governor in November.

"Normally they go with our highest priorities, but it depends on the financial situation of the state, how much they are able to fund," Schuh said.

The budget request states that NKU's current estimated debt is $30,634,200 and if expansion is to occur, these alternative funding sources will have to be realized.

The ceramics program currently operates from three trailers on John's Hill Road. The trailers were purchased in the early 1970's from state surplus.

Schuh said the floors in the trailers have begun to sag (the floors are supported by concrete block piers). She also said the ceramics produce a clay dust which ruins the heating units and creates a serious health hazard.

Safety A Concern During Construction

The Fine Arts building was evacuated Sept. 9 because noxious fumes from a cement sealant escaped through an open air vent and into the building.

Students and professors involved in night classes at the time started smelling fumes in the hallway, according to junior graphic design major Jeannie Heilman.

"(The smell) got real strong and smelled like solvent," said Heilman. "Our teacher came into the room and said that officials were downstairs and that we were to evacuate the room calmly. Ten minutes later we were told to evacuate the building immediately."

Heilman said the fumes affected her in a minor way.

"It was nauseating and it got worse as you went downstairs. It made me a little lightheaded and dizzy."

The incident has left some wondering exactly what happened in the building that night.

According to Director of Campus

Planning Mary Paula Schuh and Carla Chance from Administrative Affairs, the concrete sealant was poured on an elevated concrete floor slab, near the old theater lobby, at the end of the work day. The workers who poured it did not wear masks while they were doing the job.

The sealant is used to cure and seal acrylic solids. In other words, the sealant keeps the concrete from breaking or cracking, according to Schuh.

About an hour after the product is down, the sealant becomes four-times heavier than air. Used on the outside of the building, it does not pose a problem because the chemical (consisting of a 70 percent petroleum base - as used in paint thinner, and 30 percent acrylics and solvents) will settle into the ground and the wind will eventually carry it away. However, on the inside, the chemical solvent settles into the floor, said Schuh.

The fumes, therefore, traveled through a large, uncovered air vent near the floor slab and went through the rest of the building.

Tony Hall, environmental safety coordinator, said the department of public safety was called and immediately went to the Fine Arts building. Hall met with Dan Drake, director of the physical plant, and Director of DPS Fred Otto and they decided to evacuate the building.

Shortly thereafter, according to Hall, the Cold Spring and Highland Heights emergency medical services arrived to help any students who felt affects from chemicals.

Some symptoms included headaches, dizziness and nausea. These symptoms are short term and not at all permanently hazardous. Twelve students were treated at the scene, but no one was taken to the hospital. Classes continued as scheduled the next day.

So, what caused the incident?

According to Drake, it had a lot to do with the weather. The humidity for that day was around 99 percent and the water in the concrete made the conditions even worse.

NKU has since researched, along with the Matrix Constructions Co., other chemicals, water based, to use as sealants in the future.

However, the incident did not delay construction. Another indoor pour isn't scheduled until later in the month and the building is still to be completed by July 1992, said Schuh.

Schuh also said though the construction is causing some inconveniences, students have not been complaining.

"Everyone's been very good about all of that," said Schuh.

Vice President for Student Development Norleen Pomerantz said she saw some good come out of the incident. She said there are many strange smells from paints and other chemicals in the Fine Arts building that are routinely ignored, and maybe this incident alerted students and faculty to question strange smells they would regularly dismiss.

Presidential Candidate Coming to NKU

DIANE GOETZ
EDITOR

For the first time in the university's history, a presidential candidate will be visiting NKU on the campaign trail.

Democratic presidential candidate Paul Tsongas will be visiting NKU Oct. 2. He will be giving a speech in the University Center Theater at 2 p.m.

"This is the first time that a presidential candidate has come to NKU," according to Crystal Litz, vice president of the campus Young Democrats.

While in St. Louis for the national convention, members of NKU's Young Democrats met with some of Tsongas' campaign people. The groups sent Tsongas an invitation and he eventually accepted.

Tsongas will be attending a brunch fundraiser in Cincinnati in the morning, then coming to NKU, said Litz.

"After his speech here (NKU), the Young Democrats are escorting him to Louisville for another fundraiser, said Litz.

Both Litz and Brian Taylor, president of the Young Democrats, urge students, faculty and staff to come hear him speak.

"I would like to stress that this is not a partisan event," said Litz. "We (NKU) have never had a presidential candidate speak at the university.

"You don't get to see a presidential speech everyday. It's something different from a governor speech and you'll always remember it," she added.

"I would like to invite everyone to attend and ask questions," Taylor said.

"I think every voter makes a difference," he added.

Taylor said they are working on trying to bring more presidential candidates to NKU this year.

"I think we may be able to get a few other presidential candidates as well," Taylor said. "Our past efforts have been successful for other candidates and visitors have been impressed."

According to Litz, Tsongas is a social liberal but a fiscal conservative. She said he believes that business needs to come back into the Democratic party.

Tsongas currently serves as chairman of the Massachusetts Board of Regents of Higher Education.

His experiences include terms as a United States Senator and a U.S. Representative.

Phi Beta Sigma

Fraternity Expansion A Possibility

AMY ARBINO

CONTRIBUTING WRITER

NKU may be getting a new fraternity on campus.

Phi Beta Sigma Fraternity has shown a great deal of interest in Northern Kentucky University's Greek community. This fraternity is one of the eight historically African-American fraternities.

Phi Beta Sigma was founded in 1914 at Howard University. Its motto is, "Culture for Service and Service for Humanity." It is predominately a black Greek-lettered organization with over 90,000 members and 600 chapters within the United States and Switzerland.

"Many African-American students are going back to the historically black universities, because there are more opportunities for them. Now students who are interested in joining an African-American fraternity will have another choice. This is another activity that will aid in retention efforts," said Teretha Prioleau, the assistant dean of African-American Affairs.

"(It would) be good to have another fraternal organization to colonize on campus," stated Jerome Bowles, president of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity and the Black United Students.

"Bringing positivism and leadership to the university community, Sigmas will be another organization to contribute to brotherhood, leadership and development of future leaders," Bowles said.

The new national theme for the fraternity is: "Sigmas Focus on Issues that impact the African-American Male to Strengthen America's Communities."

These men are dedicated to promoting African-American freedom, justice, equal rights, and service to America's communities. Some of the organizations the Sigmas work closely with are: the NAACP, March of Dimes Birth Defects Association, National Boys' Club of America and a project known as "Sigmas Attack Teenage Pregnancy."

"Every time I have seen the Sigmas, they have been a positive group of brothers who create a positive atmosphere. Everything they do is to help something or someone," stated Todd Franklin, a student interested in Phi Beta Sigma.

Franklin also believes they will be an aid in the recruitment and retention of African-American students to NKU.

*A Different ViewpointSoviet Panel Discusses Recent Changes

The Sister Cities Project panel discussed the changes that have occurred since the Soviet coup attempt. Northerner photo by Julie Venable.

DIANE GOETZ
EDITOR

All kinds of changes are taking place in the Soviet Union today, but the biggest question asked by NKU students who recently met with a Soviet delegation was "how are individuals coping with their day to day lives?"

As part of the Sister Cities delegation in Cincinnati, four residents of the Soviet Union came to NKU to visit an American university. The group toured the campus and visited a political science class entitled "The Death of Communism?" last Monday Sept. 16.

Most of the delegation was unable to speak English, with the exception of one woman who interpreted the entire discussion for both the students and guests.

Both the students and the Soviet guests were curious about the other's culture and political ideas.

The guests, from the Ukraine, all worked in disciplines of education.

One of the panel's topic of discussion was American universities versus Soviet universities. In the Soviet Union, citizens can go to college, but they must know their particular area of study when they begin and are not permitted to change their major, according to the panel members.

Some areas of study are very difficult to get into at Soviet universities, such as medicine and foreign languages.

The hottest topic of the discussion seemed to be life in the Soviet Union after the coup attempt.

The majority of the people in the Soviet Union want a secure life and coup organizers tried to act on that, according to one panel member.

All four of the guests agreed they were glad the coup is over and did not last long.

The Soviet Union's economy is literally on the edge of a knife, according to one panel member.

He said in order to improve the economy it must attract investors to locate industries in the Soviet Union, but the country is in such turmoil that the area is not desirable for foreign investment.

A new economy has meant changes for a number of people in the Soviet Union, the panel members agreed.

In general, the life of the average person is much more complicated now.

"You don't see as many smiles in the streets as you did six years ago," said Nikolai Korzh, chairman of a medical college in the Ukraine.

"Many social issues have remained unsettled and wage increases have been minimal," he added.

Korzh said he was surprised at how many Americans smiled at him and were generally very friendly to him.

Each panel member was optimistic that reform is positive and achievable.

Professors Share Nomination Views

MICHAEL BUNZEL
NEWS EDITOR

He started his climb in Pin Point, Georgia. The climb has seen obstacles, from racism to discrimination, but with the help of others he has reached the pinnacle.

At the pinnacle an opportunity awaits that most lawyers and judges dream about, but there is one last obstacle that remains from reaching this dream - the 14-member Senate Judiciary Committee and confirmation of the senate.

Two NKU law professors, Stephanie Jones and John Valauri, shared their views on the man who awaits this dream, Judge Clarence Thomas. They discussed his possible confirmation and their opinions on who they feel is the real Judge Thomas.

Jones said she feels he was not nominated by the Bush Administration because of his record on the Court of Appeals but rather his loyalty to the Reagan/Bush Administration.

"Had he not been so willing to carry out the administration's beliefs he would not have been nominated," she said. "There are plenty of other black judges and lawyers who are more qualified, but simply do not have that background."

Thomas responses in front of the committee, according to Valauri, did not hurt his chances to become the next Supreme Court Justice.

"It increases his chances of being approved by the committee and the senate by innocuous answers rather than informative answers," Valauri said.

"An informative answer might be controversial and work against him."

"As a result of this, the process provides little real information either to the committee or to the general public," said Valauri.

Thomas has stated and been documented on more than one occasion on believing in natural law.

Natural law as stated by Valauri is a law that does not come from a written source but rather some higher form of authority such as God, nature, or reality.

"The law can have both liberal and conservative versions. In this context some liberal senators are worried that, when on the court, Thomas might use the conservative version of natural law to over-rule precedents or statutes in interpreting the Constitution."

Jones said she questions Thomas' views on affirmative action, "(Thomas says) it breeds dependency."

While growing up, Jones said, she benefited from having mentors along the way to help get opportunities and chances other people didn't have, like Thomas.

However, unlike Thomas, Jones said she refuses to turn her back on others and tell them they are not allowed the same chances she had.

"It's not right. Here's a man who benefited from affirmative action. He was nominated because he is black. So his nomination is an extreme case of affirmative action at work," Jones said.

As far as Thomas helping overturn the controversial Roe v. Wade, both professors agree there already seems to be enough votes on the Supreme Court to overturn the case, without Thomas.

"Looks like there are enough votes to overturn the case, if you take the current justices at their word," Valauri said. "However, despite their past statements, some justices still hesitate to overrule major cases."

Thomas has said that since 1973 when Roe v. Wade was passed he has not formed an opinion on the case.

"Either he is not telling the truth or he is very intellectually shallow," Jones said. "How can you not form or even discuss the case, as he says he hasn't?"

With Thomas possibly becoming the new justice, he could find himself in a position as a role model for blacks, which Jones said he does not measure up.

"He did the politically correct thing, he knew he could move up much faster with the politically correct side," said Jones.

"Youths will ask, should I help others around me and make a difference or sell out to who ever is in power to gain personal achievement."

But what worries Jones, she said, is his seeming lack of compassion toward the small voices in this country.

"As a black woman in this society, I feel very left out and worried about other minorities in this country."

It was a brilliant political move by Bush to nominate Thomas, Jones said. It divided the black voters.

"The reason a lot of blacks are not opposing Thomas is they think he will be the only chance of having a black justice on the court, regardless of his record."

News Flash: NKU Tuition Raised Again

DIANE GOETZ
EDITOR

What an incredible surprise! Tuition is being raised for next year. This is so unexpected. (You were all surprised, weren't you?)

What a news flash. NKU's tuition is being raised again. Now, before you all start running over to the Administrative Center yelling at the top administrators, keep in mind that they are not the people who raised the tuition.

Every year when tuition is raised I'm sure I hear close to 100 complaints about how administrators around here don't really care about the students, because they've raised the tuition again.

NKU administrators did not raise tuition again. The Kentucky Council on Higher Education raised it. They had to.

It's a pity when people are blaming the wrong people. Essentially, you should be calling your congressman and President George Bush. Complain to them.

I know you're all asking, "What did this wonderful President, the one who led us to victory in the Persian Gulf, do to raise my tuition?"

It's plain and simple, top legislators in this country do not put nearly enough money into education, and, unfortunately, we are the ones who pay dearly.

What these legislators fail to see is that education could solve a number of other problems. Minus a recession, people with a good education are much more likely to find a job than those without one.

Lower college tuition might enable some to attend college and eventually get off welfare or unemployment. This is allocated decreases, states must find another way to keep these schools operating. Usually, that means another tuition increase.

Unfortunately, NKU is getting the shaft both federally and through the state. NKU is the fourth largest school in the state according to enrollment figures.

Yet, we receive the same amount of state funding as Morehead State and attend class on a part-time basis.

It's a double edged sword. Therefore, one has to wonder - are students working full-time and going to school part time in order to pay for the tuition that is being raised every year.

I'm sure there is a large number of students attending part-time so they can pay for school. Not everyone is eligible for financial aid.

"What these legislatures fail to see is that education could solve a number of problems."

only one example, but there are many more social programs that our tax dollars are spent on that could be eventually reduced if more of the population could receive an education.

After a while, you have to ask yourself, 'is this a land of opportunity for everyone, or for one group - the wealthy?' It's much more likely that a wealthy child can go to college over a middle class or poor child.

When the amount of federal funding

Murray State, both of which have about half the amount of students that NKU does.

'How can this be?' you ask. This question can be answered in three words - full time equivalency. The state allocates funding according to the number of full-time students.

NKU is a very non-traditional campus. Many of our students work full-time and

People could argue with me for days on the importance of making education a high priority in this country. You can be sure next year during the presidential campaign both sides will be spouting that they will be the 'education president.'

We are victims of these unkept promises. It sickens me to think of how difficult an ordeal college has been for some of my friends.

The next time you're watching the news and you see U.S. tanks rolling through the streets of Iraq, remember some of the money that could have been spent on education was spent on that tank.

What do you mean, "Not another tuition increase"?

Stringer Stresses Involvement

Dear Students:

I would like to take this opportunity to ask the student body to do something that has been lacking at Northern's campus in the three years I have attended this university and that is simply this: GET INVOLVED! There are approximately 100 different organizations on campus and I am sure that at least one will be of interest to each of you.

There is a ski club, a political science club, cheerleaders, fraternities, sororities and just about any other organization you can think of. All these organizations are extremely interested in new members and would be very glad to hear from you.

If there isn't an organization that you are interested in, why not start your own? I will be more than willing to help anyone interested in starting a new organization through the administrative processes. It's not hard and you will be helping not only yourself, but all the other students by providing them with a broader choice of activities at Northern.

If you have any questions about existing organizations or establishing one, call Student Government at 572-5149.

In terms of my activities, I would like to report that I attended the Council on Higher Education's Decision Makers Conference Sept. 15-16. I attended workshops concerning capital budgets of universities and rewarding teaching excellence, a panel discussion of the state of higher education in Kentucky, and forums for both gubernatorial candidates. It was an extremely informative conference and I hope to use some of the ideas I received there in the near future.

Finally, I would like to reiterate that you can make Northern into more than a second hand school if you just become more involved. Your participation will only help you and the university in the future.

Thank you for your time and have a safe week.

Sincerely
David A. Stringer

Thomas Nomination Raises Questions

Dear Editor:

The recent nomination of Judge Clarence Thomas to the Supreme Court exposes a fatal flaw in the dogma of the American Left. For almost thirty years, the National Democratic party has made the vaunted claim that its liberal orthodoxy is the only political alternative for members of America's minority community. The singular way for anyone of color to succeed is through a deep commitment to the failed tenets of "Great Society" socialism. Attempts by certain minority authors to question the effectiveness or merit of this misdirected loyalty are usually met with harsh rebukes from the liberal establishment.

It only makes sense then that a conservative such as Clarence Thomas would cause the American Left so much consternation. Here is a man who rejects the liberal agenda in favor of a more workable approach. Instead of dependence upon the federal government for cradle-to-grave security, Thomas advocates self-help and rugged individualism. His leadership during the Reagan administration in the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission reflected this relief by demonstrating a renewed respect for the ability of businesses to manage their internal affairs without unjust interference from federal bureaucrats.

Such a "politically incorrect" outlook infuriates opponents of his confirmation. Some senators, such as Howard Metzenbaum of Ohio, even went so far as to announce their opposition to Thomas before the hearings began. The idea of a "black conservative" is obviously very repugnant to liberal stalwarts on Capitol Hill.

Most disturbing to Thomas' opponents, however, is what his confirmation signifies. The court that once served as a bulwark for unpopular liberal ideology will have a decidedly conservative bent well into the 21st century. As one syndicated columnist remarked, "The despised period of activism on the high court has ended, the era of judicial integrity as begun."

Scott Kappas

What began as a few curious spectators slowing down by the stage to see what was going on, ended up a crowd of students joined together by a common interest - music.

Two bands, Bird House and Legacy, filled the air with a pulsating sound on an otherwise gloomy afternoon last Wednesday, Sept. 18. The yearly event, sponsored by the Activities Programming Board, Student Government and WRN, is a sort of fair well to the warm weather fun of summer.

The two bands managed to keep on-lookers interest, even with the posing threat and eventual heavy downpour of rain.

Bird House began with its up-beat, original tunes and jumpy lead singer, NKU senior Jeff Abbott, to create a lively performance.

Once the started, booming amplifiers carried the music all the campus, attracting many listeners. Some stopped by for a little entertainment in between classes and others for the food and activity booths set up by different student organizations.

The rain began as the second band was setting up its equipment, but did not chase many away. Students still stuck around to hear Legacy.

With the drum thumping and the volume cranked up, Legacy kept the rock rolling by playing music from groups like Led Zeppelin and Metallica.

"I think we had a really good turnout even though it was raining," said Todd Halusek, member of the Activities Programming Board.

"Everyone who stopped by seemed to enjoy the music and the food at the different student organization booths," said SG Public Relations Director Amy Conrad. "The rain didn't seem to stop the good time."

Who W.A.S. that Man?

Free speech is alive and well on Northern's campus.

By now many students have seen an odd figure seated outside the university center.

One cannot help but notice the man dressed in an array of costumes; one day he's Uncle Sam, the next day a pilgrim.

Well, that man is none other than Dr. WAS. WAS, whose real name is Gerald Davidson, is a social activist and president of Water, Air and Soil (W.A.S.).

W.A.S. is an activist organization founded by Davidson to raise public awareness on a broad range of social and environmental issues.

W.A.S. is concerned with the ongoing destruction of the environment. Davidson said he favors the implementation of new and unusual policies; these include cleaning up the Ohio River and creating fish food hatcheries and colonies.

Davidson can be seen frequently in the NKU free speech area. He sets up his table and large, handpainted signs, then challenges passing students to discuss the issues. Some of his ideas may seem may seem odd and eccentric to the average student, but Davidson said he welcomes criticism and debate.

Davidson said he takes great delight in exposing and making fun of society's hypocrisy and apathy.

He stresses he is not afraid to go against the grain in order to express and promote his organization's agenda.

Davidson frequently takes his message to other area universities. He can also be seen on the campuses of the University of Cincinnati, Xavier University, and Miami University.

Davidson describes himself as an original thinker and a social non-conformist in the spirit of the American 1960's counterculture.

He said he feels that the system itself is the problem and not the solution to humanity's modern malaise.

Davidson is critical of the student apathy that he feels is rampant in the 1990's.

He said he feels that his political and ideological beliefs defy pigeon holding. He stresses that he is more concerned with issues than labels.

"W.A.S. is politically neutral," said Davidson.

Davidson attempts to recruit students into his organization by having them sign his W.A.S. sheet. He said he receives a variety of reactions from students.

"Some students ignore me, some make insults, and others sign right up," he said with a smile.

Davidson said he is an advocate of free speech. He said he thinks it is important to defend his right to present and promote his views.

His stance has led him into conflict with various authorities on more than one occasion.

He said he accepts this as part of the price he has to pay to get his agenda to the public.

Davidson is also a self-described inventor and said that he has worked as a consultant to corporations such as General Motors.

Davidson said he intends to continue his on campus presentations in order to enlighten students and combat social apathy and indifference.

"If you don't stand for something, you'll fall for anything. Silence is the vote of complacency," he said, summing up what he said is one of his most cherished concepts.

Nineteen Year Professor Retires

Stallings Taking It Easy During Retirement

ANN KLEEMEIER
STAFF WRITER

Frank Stallings, professor of English at Northern for nineteen, recently retired.

Stallings taught many memorable American literature courses and created an advanced composition course.

Stallings earned his baccalaureate and masters degrees at West Texas State, and his doctorate at the University of Texas at Austin.

He taught for ten years at the University of Texas at Arlington, spent two years teaching at Thomas More College, and taught at NKU for nineteen years.

Stallings, who has inspired many students to continue their education beyond the baccalaureate level, said two of his college professors were an inspiration to him. Mattie Mack, an English professor and a very demanding history professor named Hattie Anderson greatly influenced him.

Stallings said he will miss having students very much. He enjoyed getting to know students and watching them progress.

Now that he has retired, Dr. Stallings has time to work on projects that have been left unfinished for years because of his busy schedule. He is also putting together a history of NKU for its twenty-fifth anniversary in 1993 and recruits students for the CCSB study programs, which give students a chance to travel to England, Ireland, and Scotland.

"I'm going to take things one day at a time," said Stallings.

Barry Anderson, acting chairman of the department of art, said although he thinks the university has made every effort to upgrade the trailers, they have suffered deterioration.

"We're in desperate need of a new facility," he said.

The proposed structure would be what Anderson terms "a pretty bare bones kind of building," having studio space and classrooms, along with an outdoor kiln.

The existing Natural Science Building also has a few problems, according to the budget request. The request states that most labs lack proper ventilation, fume hoods, emergency showers and eyewash facilities.

The request also states that vibration problems plague the building, damaging valuable lab equipment and making some experiments impossible.

A new building would house the biology, chemistry, physics and geology departments. This would leave the existing building vacant for other departments to use for classroom space.

The suggested University Center expansion would provide additional meeting rooms and dining facilities according to the request.

The expansion would include the construction of an enclosure between the center and the Administration Building, linking three floors. The budget request states this will not only alleviate water leakage problems in the Administrative Building but will also make the registration process more convenient for students.

Freddy's Dead: Thank Goodness!

ALLEN SINGER
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

Rated R - adult situations, profanity, violence (96 minutes)

*1/2 (1 star=poor, 2 stars=fair, 3 stars=good, 4 stars=excellent)

New Line Cinemas told us they saved the best for last. I think that if this is their best, then I don't want to see anymore because it couldn't get any worse.

I'm not saying that the film was bad, it simply was not nearly as good as the four previous films.

In "Freddy's Dead: The Final Nightmare," a child psychologist, Maggie Burroughs (played by Lisa Zane), working in a youth shelter, experiences recurring nightmares concerning her father, mother, and Freddy. These nightmares are intensified by the arrival of a John Doe with amnesia who experiences similar dreams.

Together they travel to Springwood, Ohio, where they and three teenagers deal with Freddy in their individual dreams.

They soon realize that Freddy has a child and it is one of them. Maggie has fight Freddy herself, using 3-D glasses, and in the finale Freddy is brought into the real world.

One of the most interesting parts of the movie is when Freddy's past is discussed and the audience is able to see why he is the way he is. The audience sees what he was like when he was married and had a 5-year-old daughter.

Part of the ending is in 3-D or "Freddyvision." The audience sees the dream world as Freddy supposedly sees it. The special effects are quite good. However, the 3-D image really does nothing for the movie; the movie would have been the same without the extra effects.

The movie had its funny moments with Freddy's sarcasm and silly things he did to his victims. Yet, the movie was not nearly as violent and visually disgusting as the previous four. I think this is one of the faults; audiences expect more out of Freddy.

Overall, "Freddy's Dead" could have been better, though the musical score was pretty good. It featured specialized rock songs about Freddy and some background music with recurring themes of Mussorgsky's "Night on Bald Mountain."

If you are a true Freddy fan, go see this movie. However, see it in a matinee rather than spending $6.50 or more for an evening show. Actually, I suggest you wait for the video to come out, unless you really crave the 3-D effects. Believe me, they are not that thrilling, but at least you get to keep the neat glasses.

Infectious Grooves: Making You Move

PAUL DANIELS
STAFF WRITER

What do you get when you cross Jane's Addiction with Suicidal Tendencies? No, it's not a prescription for Prozac, it's the Infectious Grooves.

Infectious Grooves, featuring members of Suicidal Tendencies and Jane's Addiction, has just released its debut album, quaintly titled The Plague That Makes Your Booty Move... It's The Infectious Grooves.

"How is it" you ask? Well, this is one that just has to be experienced.

With music that changes more than tri-state weather, and bits of dialogue thrown in between songs just to keep things interesting, this album definitely has the luxury of being original (although at times it does echo the Red Hot Chili Peppers).

The problem is, just when the album begins to grow on you, it changes completely and makes you want to claw your eyes out. Then, just when the listener is about to throw the album out the window, it changes again and produces a groove that no one could resist.

If the main goal of The Plague That Makes Your Booty Move is to keep the listener blissfully off balance, then it definitely succeeds. Songs like "Stop Funk'n With My Head," "Monster Skank," and the ever traditional "You Lie... And Yo Breath Stank," truly keep the listener amused if nothing else. However, not even funky rhythms and super grooves can keep the formula from wearing thin after four or five such tunes.

This album is obviously not for the fans of "mainstream" rock and roll, but for those who enjoy hearing the unusual, or just like to indulge in mindless fun, it's guaranteed to make your booty move.

Do you have any ideas for a record review?

"It is unclear whether we would reconvene the same committee, or reform a new committee," he said.

Poole explained that Hale has until Sept. 24 to make his decision.

"There are still issues to talk about," he said.

Hale, reached for comment in his home in Pocatello, Idaho, mentioned the possibility that the negotiations may have to be extended.

"Things have not been entirely decided or agreed upon," he said.

In the meantime, things are said to be looking up in the history department.

"I think he's going to come, though I must say, things are dragging on," said history professor Dr. Frank Steely. "He should work well. He has come highly recommended and is acceptable to the department."

Poole said he thought that students will benefit from the appointment of a new chair.

"Things always go better for students when things are going well organizationally. I don't know if the classroom instruction will improve - the atmosphere in the department will now be more positive," he said.

Blank said that she is also optimistic that having chair will improve the situation in the history department.

"You can't get stuff done without a leader. The chair has been vacant for so long. The department has been adrift," she said. "Oh, sure, it's got to be better - fresh ideas are always good. Dr. Hale seems like he wants to join in the crowd and get busy - like he really wants to help us."

Questions Linger Over Administration's Denial of History Chair to DeMarcus

ANN ABBOTT
FEATURES EDITOR

On the subject of last year's controversy over the chair appointment, the administration's overturn of the faculty approved appointment, and the subsequent lawsuit and settlement, most parties, including DeMarcus and Poole had no comment.

Only students would comment on the situation.

"The administration tried to expand authority past their limits," said Chuck Hollis, a history junior. "DeMarcus was elected on a two to one margin. Dean Poole refused to confirm him, I think, because of his connections to collective bargaining for faculty."

Junior Lisa Blank also said that she supported Dr. DeMarcus.

"He (DeMarcus) has made such a difference to me and all of these other people. From his past records, no one can argue that he was an ineffective administrator, and anyone who has ever been in his class knows that he's a great teacher," she said.

Senior Sean Hennessey said that he agrees with Blank and Hollis, and said that he felt an injustice had been done to the department and the students, as well as to DeMarcus.

Using the Kentucky appropriations formula to determine tuition increases, the Council on Higher Education looks at institutions total need for state funds based upon current programs.

"The formula is a valuable tool for comparing institutions within Kentucky and allows for comparisons of funding levels in other states," said Dennis Taulbee, vice president of Administrative Affairs.

The formula, however, does not take into account projected enrollment increases. The tuition is adjusted to inflation each year, Taulbee said.

Furthermore, the formula enables institutions to achieve similar salaries and level of services as those of other institutions of similar size and purpose in other states and in Kentucky.

The council divides the state universities into four separate categories.

The community colleges, University of Kentucky, University of Louisville and the regional universities.

NKU is considered a regional university along with, Eastern Kentucky University, Western Kentucky University, Morehead State, Murray State and Kentucky State University.

The council sets the tuition, but the Board of Regents sets the activities fees and schools then can add to that amount, Taulbee said.

At $15, NKU has one of the lowest activities fees in the state, he said.

"We used the fees to develop the academic computer lab and provide student computing across campus," he said.

Both Hollister and Taulbee agree the prospect of getting more money from the state seems remote.

"This was an optimistic proposal ($200 million)," Hollister said. "We tend to think it could get a lot worse."

"The state picture is pretty depressing," said Taulbee. "I'm not quite sure just how much money higher education will get, but we're aware the prospects are bleak."

Cross Country Teams Finish Second To Local Rival Xavier University

SCOTT COOK
SPORTS EDITOR

Both NKU cross country teams finished second to Xavier University last Saturday giving Xavier bragging rights until the next meeting of the local rivals.

"Last year at Xavier we beat them by a point, that's what started our rivalry," said junior Chris Fitzgerald.

This time around Xavier turned the tables on NKU and defeated the Norse in the men's race by a point.

Fitzgerald led NKU runners in the race with a third place finish. His time for the five mile race was 27:23.

"It was my fastest time ever," said Fitzgerald.

NKU's top runner, sophomore Ernie Brooks, competed in the race with an injured back. Despite the injury he still finished fifth.

Brooks, who didn't practice until Friday, said his back bothered him during the race.

"At about the mile mark it tightened up," Brooks said.

Brooks was running in the lead at the time with Fitzgerald and NKU freshman James Hartfiel.

At the two mile mark Fitzgerald and Brooks were still in the lead, but shortly after that Brooks began to fall back.

"I thought we had 'em when we were lengthening out, but they (Xavier runners Matt Alander and Mitch Graham) caught up," Fitzgerald said.

Alander and Graham pulled away from the field and went on to finish one-two in the race.

In the women's race Xavier's margin of victory was a bit more comfortable. Xavier won by nine points.

Xavier placed four runners in the top five finishers to lead them to the victory. NKU's top finisher was junior Amy Wehrman.

She finished third with a time of 20:24 in the 3.1 mile race.

"The cool weather was a plus for me because I'm not a hot weather runner," Wehrman said.

NKU coach Tim Schlotman was pleased with the performances turned in by his teams.

"We ran real well. Both teams had good times," Schlotman said.

Schlotman said his teams turned in some of their best times of the year. Although he was pleased with the times he said this isn't the best time of the season for his teams to be turning in their fastest times.

"We have to run our fastest times in October (at the Great Lakes Valley Conference Championships), not September," he said.

Soccer Team Falls To Xavier In Rain

BRIAN BALLMAN
STAFF WRITER

An early 2-0 deficit and a rain soaked field were too much for the NKU men's soccer team to overcome against Division I opponent Xavier University.

The Musketeers defeated the Norse 3-1, dropping NKU's overall record to 3-2 and to 0-1 in the Great Lakes Valley Conference.

Xavier jumped out in front quickly when T.J. Pritchard rebounded a headball from Mike Derhake to score seven minutes into the game.

Just over a minute later, Xavier's Charlie Combs faked his way around NKU defender Sean Duggan and put the ball past sophomore goalie Tim Yacks to give Xavier a 2-0 lead.

NKU coach John Toeppen explained his team's slow start.

"We came out flat in the first ten minutes and they (Xavier) got the two goals. I thought we played well after that and controlled the half," Toeppen said.

The game was played in a steady rain that left puddles of water all over the field. The Norsemen were unable to make many of the passes and moves they like to make in their offensive game plan.

Coach Toeppen said he felt the rain was a factor.

"It (the rain) changes the way the game is played. On a wet field it (the game) can go either way," Toeppen said.

NKU caught a break near the end of the first half when Xavier was called for pushing NKU freshman forward Jeff Gough in the penalty area.

NKU was awarded a penalty kick.

Tom Derenthal, NKU's leading scorer, converted the opportunity and cut Xavier's lead to 2-1.

The score held until halftime.

Xavier came out quickly once again to start the second half. On a two-on-one break, Doug Tegge scored on a pass from Combs to put Xavier up 3-1, only five minutes into the half.

NKU argued that Xavier was offside on the play, but the officials allowed the goal to stand.

NKU settled down again but could not convert any of the scoring opportunities it had.

The Norse were penalized for being offside seven times, killing chances to challenge Xavier goalie Dave Shureck.

The final statistics showed that Xavier only outshot NKU 14-13 and committed 17 fouls to only eight for NKU, but NKU could never overcome the early two-goal deficit.

Volleyball Team Wins Home Opener

SCOTT COOK
SPORTS EDITOR

The NKU Lady Norse volleyball team used a strong service attack to dominate Central State University in its home opener last Wednesday.

NKU won the match in three straight games, 15-3, 15-6, 15-9.

"We'll take it," coach Mary Biermann said after the game.

"The last game we got a bit bogged down because we had three subs in, that sort of messes up the chemistry," Biermann said.

The win brings the team's record to 4-6.

Biermann said she was pleased with the team's serving during the match, especially with freshman Ann Hicks. Hicks led the Lady Norse with 10 aces in the match.

"I just scooted back and served harder like she (coach Biermann) said," Hicks said.

NKU's service game directly accounted for nearly half of the team's points in the match.

The Lady Norse finished with 22 aces

NKU jumped out to a 7-0 lead in the first game. The teams played to 9-3 when Hicks first serve opportunity of the night came.

She served out the game for the Lady Norse. The final two points of the game came off service aces by Hicks.

NKU was down 2-0 in the second game when Hicks came up to serve again.

Three straight aces by Hicks put the Lady Norse ahead in the game.

Central State managed to tie the game at 5-5, but that was as close as the second game got.

NKU won the second game 15-6.

The Lady Norse jumped out to a 3-0 lead in the third game but, Central State tied the game at 4-4 and eventually took an 8-4 lead.

However, NKU's service game took over. Sophomore setter Shawn Casey served four aces in seven serve attempts to give the Lady Norse a 10-8 lead.

NKU went on to win the final game 15-9.

Weekend Roundup

Coach Says Key Is To Remain Persistent

SCOTT COOK
SPORTS EDITOR

Despite losing its first two conference games this weekend the NKU volleyball team hasn't begun to panic.

"The key to being successful is to be persistent," head coach Mary Biermann said.

"We played pretty well, we just haven't played well enough to win."

The Lady Norse lost to Indiana/Purdue at Ft. Wayne Friday 15-10, 15-10, 15-8. Saturday they were defeated by Ashland 15-3, 15-9, 15-13.

Biermann said Ashland will probably be the best team in the Great Lakes Valley Conference this season.

Against IPFW sophomore Tamara Ramer led the Lady Norse with four aces.

Sophomore Peggy Ziegler added two aces and led the team in kills with 12.

Against Ashland senior Linda Schnetzer led the team with four aces and 10 kills.

Biermann said the team is trying to serve for aces because its attack is still weak.

"The team's attitude is good. They know we're learning and trying to improve," Biermann said.

"As long as we be persistent we'll be successful," she said.
