Board of Regents Approves Increase In Student Tuition

HOLLY JO KOONS
EDITOR

During the Board of Regents Jan. 30 meeting, the board approved a tuition hike for in-state and out-of-state students.

Full-time in-state undergraduate tuition, presently set at $645, will increase 9.3 percent to $705 per semester. Part-time undergraduate students will pay $60 per semester credit hour, a 9.1 percent increase of the present $55 credit hour amount.

Meanwhile, full-time out-of-state undergraduate tuition, presently set at $1,825, will increase 9.9 percent to $2,005. Part-time undergraduate students will pay $168 per semester credit hour, a 9.8 percent increase of the present $153 credit hour amount.

The cost of the tuition installment plan has also increased.

Student Government President Michelle Deeley urged other Board of Regents members to reconsider the tuition installment plan increase.

The Board of Regents voted to increase the application fee by $10 and the late payment fee by $15, despite concerns voiced by Deeley.

Justification for the increase was noted "to help offset cost of the program, including bad debts."

"This increased fee should reduce the number of students utilizing the program because of accessibility, limiting usage to financial necessity" was another justification for the increase.

Deeley said the program was implemented to aid students in financial need.

"The program was designed for the student convenience, not to deter student convenience," Deeley said.

In other business: The Board of Regents voted during a special Jan. 5 meeting to adopt a resolution dealing with the "development and construction of a residential village."

Two proposals were found acceptable to the university: Pulliam Investment Company, Inc. and Graves/Turner Developments.

Of the two proposals the university preferred the proposal made by Pulliam Investment Company, Inc.

Once the resolution was adopted, "final authority to award a contract rested with the Secretary of the Finance and Administration Cabinet," according to a position statement issued by the university.

Secretary L. Rogers Wells awarded the contract to Graves/Turner Developments.

Since that time, Pulliam Investment Company, Inc., filed a protest after recent reports reflected Graves/Turner Developments may have been chosen because they had previously made a considerable contribution to the Martha Wilkinson gubernatorial campaign.

Once such reports were released, Governor Wallace Wilkinson suspended the project in order for the Board of Regents to review the project a second time.

After a closed executive session, board members reaffirmed its initial Jan. 5 resolution.

CORRECTIONS— In the Jan. 30 issue of The Northerner two mistakes appeared in the article entitled "SG Book Exchange Sales Decrease By $2,000." According to current, accurate figures, sales were actually higher than reported in the article. The final total was approximately $1,000 higher in spring semester book sales than last fall. The quote, "Since the university is growing, many students don't realize what's available to them. But if they realized what was her and that it benefited fellow student through the scholarship program, they may decide to use the book exchange," was incorrectly attributed. Amy Conrad made the above statement.

In the story entitled "Recreation Calendar Available For Students," it was incorrectly stated that students enrolled in six hours or more can use the facilities for free. Any student can use the health facilities for free. Spouse or dependent packages can only be purchased by students enrolled in six or more semester hours.

Campus Crime

The Campbell County Police Department has requested that Northern Kentucky University participate with the county and with all cities in the county in a monthly test of outdoor warning sirens.

In conjunction with this, the Department of Public Safety will activate our sirens on the first Saturday of each month at 12:15 p.m.

Sgt. Allen Thomas, Jr.

Sgt. Thomas has been in law enforcement for 13-1/2 years. Thomas served 21 years in the United States Army and retired in 1978. After he returned home, the City of Elsmere Police Department employed Thomas as dispatcher clerk and part-time reserve officer; Thomas attended NKU at the time. In Jan. 1980, Thomas left Elsmere and came to NKU as a dispatcher but continued to serve as an Elsmere police officer. In March 1980, Thomas applied for a position of public safety officer and was accepted. He resigned his position with Elsmere Police Department and became an NKU public safety officer. In Oct. 1980, Thomas was appointed to the position of acting sergeant with the Department of Public Safety and after six months passed a promotion exam covering all aspects of NKU life. Thomas served on numerous committees including the university's Grievance Committee and Emergency Evacuation Committee. During the same time, Thomas attended NKU and received his associate's degree in law enforcement in 1985. Thomas is currently a senior majoring in public administration. In 1984, Thomas became the first member of public safety to receive the Distinguished Service Award. Currently, Thomas is assigned as a special projects officer. He assists the director with such projects as hazardous waste, fire safety, the emergency warning system and other safety related areas. He also does research and the initial writing of plans. Thomas, during his 21-year Army career served 17-1/2 years outside the United States in Europe, South America, Norway, France and Southeast Asia. Currently, Thomas is the commander of Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 7453 in Covington and 9th District Surgeon. He is also a member of the Elks and the Retired Enlisted Association (U.S. Army).

The Money In Time

D.C. HALL
1990 NKU GRADUATE

Last week we set a goal for explaining how time will turn a small savings into big money. This week we are going to take steps to achieve this goal.

A little recap will help for those poor, unfortunates who fail to read The Northerner's business section each week. In the article, we tried to construct an average college student's income. We were conservative on all financial matters which yielded the following annual income.

Annual Gross:	6630.00	[$4.25 * 30 Hrs * 52 Wks]
Annual Deductions 28%:	1856.40	[6630.00 * .28]
Annual Net:	4773.60	[Annual Net Dollars]
Saving 10% Annually:	$477.60	[4773.60 * .10]

Like many people at NKU, CS (College Student) works part time averaging 30 hours per week. The numbers above assume that CS works all year and makes $4.25 per hour. If CS works more hours or makes a higher wage or salary, then all numbers increase. If CS is able to save more than 10 percent annually, then the dollars will be even greater. But the goal is not to have a campus of money misers. Instead, it is important to turn you on to the idea of compounding interest using time as your investment. An assumption is that you don't have much money, but you do have plenty of time. CS is approximately 21 years old.

Now lets get to work on building the promised "big money." You are going to have to do two things that typically sickens the average student:

1. Design a budget
2. Save money

The extreme details of forming a budget are not going to be developed here. Essentially, you need to list all costs that you are going to incur for some period of time. You also list all income you project to receive during the same period. Because so many of your costs are on a monthly cycle, it is easiest to prepare a monthly budget. I always like to see income on the same page so I include it in my budget. A monthly budget might look as simple as this:

Next Month 199x

$ _____ Housing	$ _____ Job 1 Net
$ _____ Transportation	$ _____ Job 2 Net
$ _____ Insurances	$ _____ Other Income
$ _____ Utilities
$ _____ Food
$ _____ Personal
$ _____ Miscellaneous (X%)

$ _____ TOTAL COSTS	$ _____ TOTAL INCOME

With this you can compare total costs to total income and see how much profit or loss you will have this month. Some explanation given for the above terms: Housing is the amount you pay to stay under roof. If you live with your parents and pay nothing, you would have a $0 cost for housing; if you live in the dorms, you could divide your costs for the room across the months that you will live there; if you live in the big black box in front of Chase Law Library, you will again put $0 dollars in housing. Utility costs are the sum of the phone, heat, electric, water, etc. bills that you pay. The X% in miscellaneous is an estimated amount of your earnings that will be spent for the little things that take your money- stamps, pay phones, french fries, widget 85% off sale, etc. This is something you will have to estimate for your own situation. Don't be surprised if as much as a fifth of your income is buying these little things.

The other thing that CS must learn to do, is to take Total Income less Total Costs and if there is money left over it must be saved. This is the tough one for most students. First, they don't want to even think about a budget, and second, if there is extra money in a month, it must be spent. The solution that I recommend is to add savings to your cost list. Pretend that it is a monthly bill that must be paid. Put the highest percentage that you can afford behind it (Savings X%) and regularly pay this imaginary bill as quick as you can. I put it at the top of the list above housing; this is the first bill that I allocate my income to and thus X% is much greater here than after I have paid off my other costs. With this as part of your budgeted costs, you don't have to think about two separate duties- now you create a budget and live with it. Savings is going to occur without a separate effort.

We have now set the stage for act three. CS has a typical college income and a budget and savings plan. In part three, we will see how CS can use time to be a millionaire at retirement. You are only a week away from seeing the magical, mystical, compounding machine in action.

Some say you can't teach an old dog new tricks, but if you say that to Henry Konstantinow, a 70-year-old NKU student, he might disagree.

Konstantinow has attended NKU since 1988 under the Donovan Scholars Program which allows senior citizens to attend college for free.

Konstantinow said he never stops learning. Although he is not seeking a degree, he said he is in college to stay healthy and broaden his perspectives on life.

Konstantinow, originally from Vilnius, Lithuania, married Michalina, who he calls "Mickey," in 1946 in Germany. They arrived in America on Dec. 25, 1948.

"I wanted to be a free man," Konstantinow said.

Except for a three-week stop in Ohio, they have made their home in Kentucky since arriving in America. They currently reside in Crestview.

He enrolled in three classes this semester: ballet, tennis and Computer

Aided Drafting, a technical drawing class. Konstantinow said he adjusts quite naturally to modern technology.

"You have to learn what is new today to be prepared to handle everyday tasks" Konstantinow said.

"He has a lot of vigor, a lot of spunk and a lot of life in him," said Jane Green, Konstantinow's ballet instructor. "He is real enthusiastic about everything he's doing at the university."

Niaz Latif, Konstantinow's technical drawing instructor, said Konstantinow takes good notes and understands well, even though the computer and keyboard are new to him.

Konstantinow received an associate's degree in mechanical technology from Ohio Mechanics Institute, which is now part of the University of Cincinnati. He is also a substitute technical drawing teacher for local vocational schools. Beginning April 8, he will be heading a national language appreciation class at NKU.

His most recent project is a poem he wrote and wants to set to music. He also hopes to publish the poem.

Dear Readers,

The Northerner is asking our avid readers to give their opinions about our paper. All responses will be appreciated and we wish that you remain anonymous. Our hopes are that you will seriously consider the things you wish to see changed in The Northerner, or any suggestions you may have for a new and improved campus newspaper. The staff will try to accommodate these changes and we hope that you will respond with reasonable suggestions. We here at The Northerner are trying to improve your campus paper with every issue, however, we need student input to be successful.

Responses are appreciated. To see that these responses are taken into consideration, please mail or drop off this portion of the response to The Northerner office in University Center 209, c/o Production Manager. Thank you for your concern.

As an avid reader of The Northerner, I would like to see the following improvements made in coming editions.

Greeks Also Support Teams

In response to a letter by Shelly Helmer:

It has come to my attention that you are not satisfied with the number of fans of the Norsemen basketball team. Mostly, you have accused the Greeks here at NKU of being the biggest lack in attendance. Although I agree with your point that a lot of Greeks do show up on Spirit Night, I must tell you that you are not in the position to be worrying about what we do.

You are also blind to the fact that there are at least seven or eight ADG's (Deltas) at every home game. We even go on the road trips to Georgetown, Indianapolis and Bellarmine every year. You must really have too much time on your hands to find something like this to complain about and to use us and the other Greeks as your scapegoat.

It might also help to inform you that you are just one of 11,000 students in a university that is only 5 percent Greek. It seems to me that maybe you should be blaming the rest of Northern's apathetic student body, because if you only know just how much the Greeks do for NKU, which apparently you don't, you would stay off our backs.

All Sides Should Be Printed

Dear Editor,

In the Jan. 30 issue of The Northerner a new column appeared entitled "The RIGHT Perspective." The column's objective was stated in the first paragraph: "The RIGHT Perspective is an editorial section of The Northerner dedicated to conservative thought." My question is why is there a special column for conservative thought and doesn't the staff at The Northerner feel that by giving conservatives their own column they are catering to one spectrum of its readership and ignoring another? In the disclaimer that accompanied the article, it was stated that "any opposing views to the views appearing in this article are also welcome," but just by calling it "The RIGHT Perspective" makes it clear that any views other than conservative are not welcome.

I see The Northerner as having three choices: end the column all together, create two columns: "The LEFT and RIGHT Perspective," or to replace "The RIGHT Perspective" with an editorial column dedicated to political thought. I hope The Northerner decides to follow the last route. A column dedicated to political thought whether it be conservative, liberal, Democratic, Republican or any other would be a great asset to the newspaper. It would give students a place to voice their views and may even eliminate the constant back and forth bashing between the Young Democrats and Campus Republicans on the letters to the editor page.

One-Sided Views Presented

Dear Editor,

Who actually is the editor of The Northerner? Could it be a Campus Republican or merely Scott Kappas in drag?

Is it a requirement that Northerner writers take Journalism 100? If not, we suggest it as a prerequisite. As any respectable journalist will tell you, there is a concept known as "equal time." The inclusion of the column "The RIGHT Perspective" was totally unethical. We know the staff of The Northerner is aware of the fact that Chuck McFall, the author of "The RIGHT Perspective," is president of the Campus Republicans. It stands to reason therefore if Mr. McFall is granted a forum for his political views, the same should have been allowed for the Young Democrats. No member of the Young Democrats was given the opportunity offered to Mr. McFall. We believe this is what is meant by "equal time."

Throughout the school year, the Young Democrats brought a number of well-known political figures to the campus. Meanwhile, the Campus Republicans lie in wait, priming themselves for their one "claim to fame," a pseudo debate that did nothing but leave questions about their integrity. But, of course, Scott Kappas' weekly tirades in The Northerner kept them consistently in the public eye. Despite the Young Democrats hard work, we still were never afforded one-half the space attributed to the Campus Republicans.

This leads to question exactly what type of representative views the campus newspaper is offering its readers. This type of bias and one-sided reporting is an insult to the students of NKU.

In last week's issue, The Northerner asked readers for suggestions of how to improve the paper. Our suggestion is to apply the standard of ethics used by professional journalists.

Editor's note: The author of "The RIGHT Perspective" approached the editor about writing a column presenting a conservative viewpoint; the staff did not solicit a column to present such a viewpoint. The author entitled the column himself. The column also appeared on The Northerner's editorial page, which is open to any person wishing to express an opinion. In the past, the editor did suggest a Democrat/Republican debate column, but the offer was turned down by one group. Additionally, Journalism 100 is not a prerequisite to write for The Northerner. As a publication supported by student funds, The Northerner's editorial and staff positions are open to all NKU students.

New Resolutions Passed At Recent SG Meeting

Dear Students,

Student Government passed two resolutions during the Jan. 28 meeting.

The first resolution, introduced by Rachel Klink, allocated $25 to present as a prize to the finalist of the Hollywood Squares Game played during Homecoming festivities.

The second resolution was introduced by Amy Conrad and related to students serving in the Middle East. The resolution will call upon NKU's administration to release the names of students serving in the Middle East to SG. SG will organize a campus-wide effort to periodically provide "care packages" to NKU students serving in the Middle East.

The care packages will consist of campus-related material to keep students informed of the events occurring at NKU while they are away.

This resolution has been passed by the University of Kentucky and Murray State University. It is being considered by all the Kentucky state universities as part of a statewide Board of Student Body Presidents campaign. Kentucky is the only state organizing such a project.

Any student wanting more information should call 572-5149.

Sincerely,
Michelle Deeley

Ireland Study Trips Offered To Students

RAY EGAN
STAFF WRITER

For the first time at NKU, the Cooperative Center for Study in Britain (CCSB) will offer students the opportunity to study literature in Ireland.

The 1991 Study Program in Ireland will be held for two weeks, May 13-28, during intersession summer classes.

Joseph Flory, Eastern Kentucky University professor, will teach the Modern Irish Literature course in Ireland.

"During these two weeks, students will study literature in Dublin, Ireland," he said. "Students will take a couple of days out to travel to the north and south of Dublin, with an optional three-day weekend trip to the west of Dublin to study more historical literature."

Flory, also president of the Kentucky Council of International and Higher Education, said the course does not come without work.

"Students will be asked to do some preparation before the trip and a follow-up assignment following the trip," he said. "For example, writing a paper when they return."

The program, Flory said, originated to help students travel at low costs.

"So many students could not afford programs in June and July for four to five weeks, because they were busy getting jobs to help pay for school the following semester" Flory said. "So we decided to have the Ireland trip for two weeks at a smaller cost in order for students to be able to be back in time to work and pay for school."

The program costs $1,500, compared to $2,995 for five weeks in Britain. The application deadline for the trip is March 1; at that time the student must pay a $100 application fee and a $700 initial payment. The final $700 payment is due April 1.

Passports, which can take six to eight weeks to obtain, are necessary for the program.

Michael Klembara, executive director of CCSB, said the $1,500 will cover many expenses.

"The trip will include lodging and Irish breakfasts, meal vouchers for eight meals, a two-week bus/city rail pass around Dublin and roundtrip air transportation from Cincinnati to Ireland," Klembara said.

Klembara said students must meet three requirements to be eligible for the course.

"First, the student must be in good standing at the university and a paper must be signed by the appropriate advisor," Klembara said.

"Next, if the student is taking the course for credit, they must check with their adviser for eligibility."

NKU Ins And Outs

DAVID DOWNARD
ASSOCIATE EDITOR

Did your high school counselor give you adequate information concerning educational counseling, financial aid and career counseling before you graduated?

I say "adequate" because the average ratio of students to counselors in Northern Kentucky is 350 to 1, according to Educational Talent Search Director Michael Berry.

Needless to say, numerous high school students with academic potential "fall through the cracks" of the educational system.

NKU's Educational Talent Search Program attempts to seal these cracks by aiding counselors in the eight Northern Kentucky counties, the city of Norwood in Hamilton County and Taft High School in Cincinnati.

Freshmen who have potential to succeed and whose parents do not have a four-year college degree are eligible to participate in the program.

However, Berry said low-income families are the target.

"We currently have more than 90 percent low-income participants," he said.

"We also serve about 50 drop-outs and G.E.D. (Graduate Education Diploma) youths."

The staff consists of Berry and two counselors.

They visit English classes, talk about the program and offer applications which are mailed to the student's parents. The parents must provide income information, sign the forms and send them back.

After this, the applications are screened along with transcripts and recommendations of high school counselors.

Educational Talent Search offers free assistance in such areas as goal setting, career interest testing, financial aid information and career planning.

It also offers educational counseling by supplying students with information about postsecondary schools; helps students choose a college, technical or vocational school; and college entrance test preparation.

"The purpose of our program is to keep kids in school and encourage them to continue their education," Berry said.

"The two biggest problems with students are lack of support and a tendency to set short-term goals instead of preparing for the future."

The federally funded program was created in 1965 as a result of Lyndon B. Johnson's "Great Society."

Talent Search has been at NKU since 1977.

Talent Search is located on the University College campus in Covington.

The office, located in Hankins Hall room 208, is open 8:30 a.m.-4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. For more information call (606) 572-5139.

Although it is too late for you to use this service, you may want to refer Talent Search to some high school friends or notify parents of youths who may lack interest or motivation in pursuing a postsecondary education.

Searching For Hidden Talent

NKU Baptist Students Aid Mexicans

MARLENE KINMAN
STAFF WRITER

Mexico—a place of plenty or a place of poverty? The answer you get depends on whom you ask.

The Mexico Jon Lucas remembers is a crowded city with sprawling suburbs and an efficient mass transit system, not unlike large cities in the United States.

Mexico, as remembered by Mark Schuerman, is a small village with dirt roads and bamboo huts with no electricity and no bathrooms.

Lucas recalls eating at a banquet with college students at the Baptist seminary in Mexico City.

Schuerman recalls having "cold sardines in tomato sauce on a tortilla"—the best his host family had to offer—for breakfast, three times in one week.

He also remembers being embarrassed about his shoes.

"A man asked how much I'd paid for my shoes," Schuerman said. "I was embarrassed to tell how much I paid for my shoes, about $25, but they (a family) wouldn't spend that much in a month or more."

Lucas and Schuerman, along with 21 other NKU Baptist Student Union members, BSU Director Rick Howerton and former Campbellsville College Campus Minister Dan Flanagan, spent part of Christmas break helping people in Mexico.

After landing in Mexico City Dec. 14, the group split up. Half went to the homes of college students they would be staying with in Mexico City for the next 10 days.

The other half spent the night at the International House for Peace, a facility operated by Quakers, then boarded a morning bus for the Huastecan region.

After seven hours, they came to Tamazunchale where the road conditions and mode of transportation changed.

The group of 12 crowded into the back of a two-ton pick-up truck (along with their luggage, two Mexican men, 40 bags of cement and a pale blue basket) for the 1-1/2 hour ride down a dirt road to La Cuchilla, their destination.

"There had been a death in one of the (Huastecan) villages, so the basket was being taken in," Schuerman said.

At La Cuchilla, a village two miles from the Tropic of Cancer, the group stayed in a two-room schoolhouse built by the Mexican government and worked with Habitat for Humanity to build permanent housing for people living in huts.

"It was all manual labor," Howerton said. "We made block—out of dirt, water, and a little cement to hold it together—all by hand. Even the mechanism used to compress it was pulled by hand."

"We'd work hard during the day, then go to the river to take a bath," said Michelle Hudson, a junior education major.

The school building at La Cuchilla, which had no electricity and no running water, was 1-1/2 hours from the nearest clinic and two hours from the nearest phone. The nearest drinking water was in a well a mile away.

During the day, BSU members went in pairs to work in various villages in the region.

"Only one village out of the five we went to had electricity," Schuerman said.

Families with as many as six children lived in two-room huts of bamboo simply tied together. They ate in one room and slept on grass mats in the other.

"The people weren't hungry," Howerton said. "They could grow food, but there was a lot of malnutrition, because they ate the same things all the time."

"If a man had a horse and a Winchester rifle, he was considered a rich male."

Beth Mizer, a senior education major, recalled how thrilled the children were to get the toys BSU members brought.

"They were just balloons and little rubber balls, things you get out of a 25-cent machine here," she said.

Elizabeth Hahn, a senior geography major, also found out Band-Aids were special when she wrapped one around a little boy's cut finger. Just because she had Band-Aids, the children thought she was a doctor, she said.

"They don't have cameras and chances to get their pictures made," Howerton said. "Families wanted us to take their picture and mail it back to them."

Pigs, chickens and skinny dogs roamed freely, even inside the huts, Hahn said.

Shuttlesworth Shares His Struggles

MIKE BUNZEL

"God always finds someone in every age and generation, though being called a fool then, to dare to rise and challenge the system and to dare to offer their lives for it," said Fred Shuttlesworth, speaking about racial discrimination in the south.

Shuttlesworth, a leading activist in Birmingham, Ala., during the civil rights movement, spoke to NKU students Jan. 28 in the University Center Theater. Michael Avey, professor of political science, invited Shuttlesworth to NKU.

"Jesus put these words in endearing terms—greater love has no man, than a man who would lay down his life for his friends," Shuttlesworth said.

Shuttlesworth believed in these words decisions, the parks and libraries were closed; thus, the movement had nothing tangible to show for its efforts.

Shuttlesworth said another challenge was the constant harassment by police officers.

"There was an unwritten rule in Birmingham— if the Klu Klux Klan didn't stop you, the police will," he said.

Shuttlesworth was arrested over 30 times and was sued over 40 times.

On Christmas night 1956, Shuttlesworth said the KKK decided it was time for him to leave the face of the earth. Klan members placed sixteen sticks of dynamite under his house, just beneath his bedroom. The explosion blew a wall into the street, uplifted the wooden floor and mangled the steel structure of King was so impressed he decided to lead the civil rights fight in Birmingham, where in turn, the first civil rights victories were made.

Shuttlesworth said people always ask if he would do it all over again.

"Yes, if I could actually feel the same inner-drive that I felt then and that it was God's truth moving on and through people," he said.

"Would I go through it if the KKK blew up my house again? Yes. Would I go through the beatings again? Yes. Would I go to jail over 30 times again? Yes. Would I go through over 40 lawsuits again? Yes. I'm a lawyer without a portfolio."

"I literally believed he that seeks to save his life shall lose, but he that will lose it for others and the sakes of the gospel and the social uplift of the men and women of the earth shall find it."

Shuttlesworth said during the '50s before Martin Luther King joined him in Birmingham, he faced many uphill battles teaching people they had dignity and should stand up for the cause.

One of these fights, Shuttlesworth said, was challenging some of Birmingham's laws concerning parks and libraries. The court's decision favored the movement's stance. But immediately after the

"When you're in a crisis of any kind, try to find where the truth and justice is, because justice and holiness are two points of God's character; without it, it wouldn't be God."

Shuttlesworth said when King came to Birmingham to see how he directed the movement, King was amazed at how the movement's members demonstrated for their cause and how their spirits had not been conquered after years of struggle.

African American Made History During Revolution

SCOTT COOK
STAFF WRITER

Crispus Attucks may be the first black hero in American history.

Crispus Attucks, you're not sure who he is? Don't worry, you are not alone, Lawrence Borne, NKU history professor, admits "I don't know much about Crispus Attucks."

James Ramage, NKU history professor, said Attucks is the "first heroic martyr of the American Revolution."

Attucks was born a slave in 1723. He escaped a plantation in Farmington, Mass., in 1750. An advertisement ran in the Boston Gazette offering 10 British pounds for his return, but he was never captured.

Historians, including Ramage, believe Attucks fled to the east coast where he became a sailor.

"He possibly became free in some way because he stayed in the same area," he said.

On March 5, 1770, Attucks became a hero.

Ramage compared that day's events to the incident at Kent State University in 1970. Attucks was among a group of men harassing British soldiers who were in Boston to protect British officials living there. The men threw snowballs and rocks at the soldiers' quarters, and the soldiers answered with gunfire.

"Attucks took two bullets in the chest and was one of the four men to die immediately," Ramage said.

The event became known as the Boston Massacre.

"It became one of the immediate propaganda issues of the coming revolution," Ramage said.

The men were buried in a patriotic funeral much like the funerals seen from Northern Ireland, Ramage said.

Paul Revere made an engraving of the Boston Massacre so prints could be made and used as propaganda, he added.

The colonists saw the Boston Massacre as a sign that the British were not going to leave them alone, Ramage said.

"This was an event that was used by the patriots to remind the American people they needed to be independent," he said.

Attucks was deemed a hero because he died in the movement for independence, Ramage said.

What makes his actions, and the actions of other black people in the American Revolution, so heroic is pointed out by Harriet Beecher Stowe in the introduction she wrote to the book "Colored Patriots of the American Revolution."

"It was not for their own land they fought, not even for a land which had adopted them, but for a land which had enslaved them, and whose laws, even in freedom, oftener oppressed than protected," she wrote. "Bravery, under such circumstances, has a peculiar beauty and merit."

In 1888, a monument dedicated to Attucks and the others who died in the Boston Massacre was placed on the Boston Common, Ramage added.

"Attucks was a real person and a genuine, known hero," Ramage concluded.

A Look Back

NKU Recognizes Holiday Students Get Day Off To Honor King

STEVE ROHS

1987 ASSOCIATE EDITOR

This year was quiet.

There were no petitions signed, no students protesting, no professors angry.

For the first time in its history, NKU celebrated Martin Luther King Day by cancelling classes Monday, and it seemed to calm those who had wondered if the university gave the civil rights leader the respect he deserves.

"The state finally said it was a holiday, and that gave us options we had not had before," said NKU President

Leon Boothe last week.

"Last year, I had been told it was not a state holiday," he said. "They did declare a holiday, but it was not mandatory."

NKU did not close last year for the national holiday, and students and faculty expressed dissatisfaction with the university for the decision.

Several students did not come to class, and those that did circulated a petition protesting the move that was sent to Gov. Martha Layne Collins, said Willie Simpson, director of minority student affairs.

"After the situation last year, some schools closed, some didn't. We needed clarification about the holiday," Boothe said.

He added the decision to close the university this year was made last spring. A program honoring King was also held Jan. 15—King's real birthday—in the University Center. A similar program was held last year.

Boothe said there was argument last year over how to better honor King.

"Some felt it was more meaningful to have a program honoring Dr. King than to take off school," he said. "It was a no-win situation."

Simpson said there seems to be satisfaction about the university's decision to honor King in both ways. He added it will help Northern's community image.

"It's difficult to say Northern respects Dr. King when we did not honor his holiday," Simpson said. "This is definitely a plus in recruitment."

The Look Back column is a weekly excerpt from past editions of The Northerner dealing with issues still being addressed today.

Editor's note: Although celebrating black history is something we do year round, The Northerner felt that Black History Month was an appropriate time to pay tribute to those black Americans who aided in the civil rights movement.

Jackson's Career-Day Sparks Lady Norse

JOHN REITMAN
STAFF WRITER

Saturday afternoon the Lady Greyhounds of the University of Indianapolis learned a whole new meaning of what it is to be "benched."

With backup center Kristy Wegley sidelined with a broken nose and NKU's leading scorer and rebounder, Christie Freppon, on the bench much of the first half in foul trouble, coach Nancy Winstel was forced to go deep down her bench early in the contest.

Stepping forward and answering the call for the Lady Norse in their 79-66 win over Indianapolis were freshman forward/center Roxann Jackson and junior guard Annie Levens.

Jackson, who scored 15 of her career high 18 points in the seesaw first half, paced the Norse to a three-point halftime lead.

Winstel told the team, according to Jackson, with Wegley out, someone would have to come off the bench and pick up the slack.

"This may have been good for us," Winstel said of the opportunity to utilize her bench. "We've got other people on this team who can score."

"Coach said it (the opportunity to play more) was open to everybody," Jackson said. "I didn't think about it. I just went out and played."

The 18 point, five rebound performance by Jackson was not a surprise to the Lady Norse bench.

"She's moved her game up a level in the last couple of games," Levens said. "She takes pressure off the other post players and off coach. She takes care of the ball and can score."

Unselfishness is something all coaches try to instill in their teams. But for the Lady Norse, 15-4 overall and 9-1 in the Great Lakes Valley Conference, being unselfish is an every day occurrence.

"We have to stick together," Winstel said, "and remember the goals we've set. We have to put the team first and that takes a lot of maturity."

One case in point Saturday was junior center Amy Middleton. Averaging almost 10 points per game, Middleton struggled Saturday shooting just one of 11 from the field. But she led the Norse with five assists and added 11 rebounds.

In the first half the lead changed hands nine times before guard Melissa Slone put in a stickback high off the glass with 9:45 left to give the Norse a lead it would never surrender.

Relegated mostly to a relief role, Slone has started the past two games for the Norse.

"Melissa has been playing some quality minutes for us," Winstel said. "And when I bring Annie in off the bench that's a heck of a sixth man."

"There's no animosity on this team as far as who starts and who doesn't," Levens said. "We're close on and off the court and it shows when we go out and play."

Known for her aggressive style of play, Levens was all over the the Regents Hall floor on defense as she, and the other Lady Norse guards, had the Greyhound's backcourt frustrated all afternoon with their defensive tenacity. Indianapolis' leading scorer, guard Mary Maravilla who averaged 15.8 points per game, was held to six points Saturday. And guard Cindy Simko, who had 13 points at halftime scored just two points in the second half.

"We need that spark," Winstel said of Levens, who had four steals and forced several of the Greyhounds' 20 turnovers.

"I was ready to play today," Levens said. "The conference games are important and I was ready to play."

In the second half the Greyhounds kept the game close, but after a 15-foot jumper by sophomore Lori McClellan with 10:10 left in the game, Indianapolis was never able to get closer than six points.

The inside outside strength of NKU forced the Greyhounds to foul down the stretch. And nine of 12 free-throw shooting sealed the win for the Norse.

Shields Pleased With Norse Progress

MATT BOHMER
STAFF WRITER

The NKU men's basketball team holds a 10-9 record just beyond the midpoint of the season, and coach Ken Shields grades them a solid "B" on the season thus far.

"Hopefully, we can stay there and win a few more games in our conference," Shields said. "We're one and a half players away from being real strong."

Shields said the team is "riddled with inconsistency" at the guard position.

"(Nick) Pangallo, (Greg) Phelia, (Craig) Wilhoit, and (Deron) Blasingame have all had their good nights and they're doing better than they did last year," Shields said. "We just need to shoot better at the free throw line and from three-point range."

The Norse are currently shooting 49.4 percent from the field, 33.8 percent from behind the three-point arch and only 68 percent from the free throw line.

But there are a lot of bright spots on the team so far. A lot of different guys are contributing, said Shields.

"David Marshall has accomplished a lot in our program and has been a real bright spot," Shields said, "And Jimmy Matthews has had some super games and he's also an outstanding defensive player."

Matthews, a senior guard, who leads the Norse in three-pointers with 44, also leads the Great Lakes Valley Conference in steals with 40.

Shields said sophomore center Todd Svoboda is having another solid season inside, and he mentioned sophomore forward Ron Marbre, and junior forward's Jerry Tevis and Kenny Brown were all making positive contributions.

Shields is satisfied with the team defense and said there is much improvement in guarding against the three-point shot.

He is also pleased with the turnovers his team is causing.

"We have showed a lot of growth in that area (causing turnovers)," Shields said. "But there is room for improvement."

According to Shields, the full court press has been good for the team. This is evident in the number of steals it's getting. After Matthews, sophomore point guard Phelia has 37 steals; followed by Marshall and Pangallo with 28 each.

Shields is hoping his team can move into the upper level of an extremely tough GLVC. Ashland, which beat the Northern 99-84 last Saturday, is currently ranked number one in Division II, and Southern Indiana, who is fourth in the conference behind Bellarmine and Kentucky Wesleyan, defeated Division I Wisconsin on the road.

Overall, Shields is pleased with the results of the year so far. He would have liked to pull out one of the close ones with St. Joseph's or Indianapolis, but is happy to see his team have a chance to win every time they take the court.

"We're a lot more competitive this year," Shields said. "We haven't been blown out by anybody."

Marshall Taking GLVC By Storm

MATT BOHMER
STAFF WRITER

NKU junior David Marshall has reached the level of basketball he knew he could play and is doing his best to show he can be a real force.

Some NAIA schools, along with several NCAA Division II schools, recruited Marshall, but he said all his friends were playing at NCAA schools and that's the level he wanted to reach.

Marshall reached Division II with a bang. He is averaging 14.6 points and 5.7 rebounds per game, while shooting more than 50 percent from the field and more than 81 percent from the free throw line.

His statistics in the rugged Great Lakes Valley Conference are more impressive. He averages 19.4 points and grabs 6.4 rebounds per game.

Marshall is a transfer from Sullivan Junior College in Louisville. The 6-foot-3 forward said he needed to go to junior college to get back on his feet.

Now Marshall is making an impression around the conference and with his coaches.

Brian Stevens, a graduate assistant coach, is impressed with Marshall's work ethic.

"He has a lot of attributes, but his greatest is his big heart," Stevens said. "He is one of the hardest workers on the team in practice and he really wants to win."

Marshall feels he has been doing OK in coach Ken Shields' system.

David Marshall

"Coach Shields has given me a lot of freedom and it's (Division II) more wide open," Marshall said. "I've gotten a lot of steals, a lot of stick-backs; I've been hitting my free throws; and my shot has been falling."

Marshall said he received his nickname, "Fox," when he was younger. He said everybody used to say he looked like comedian Redd Foxx of "Sanford and Son" fame. Then a lady showed him a picture of a young Foxx, and he said he looked just like him. The nickname has been with him ever since.

Marshall feels his team is not far away from being truly successful.

"We have to focus more in critical situations and not have mental lapses," he said. "We need to recognize the situation and get the shot we need. We've got the talent. It's just a matter of putting it all together and getting it running on all cylinders."

Little children did not wear clothes, except to be in pictures.

"I asked about crime," Howerton said. "There are no police, and the only crime anyone could remember happened seven years ago. Two men, both drunk, shot and killed each other with their Winchesters."

"Their lifestyle is so different," Scheurman said. "You might think the trip made me appreciate what I have, but it did more than that. I learned to appreciate that their lifestyle was a good lifestyle too."

Hahn agreed. "They were a happy people," she said.

The group that stayed in Mexico City working with churches and missions had a different experience.

"The students were our interpreters," said Lucas, a sophomore business management major who stayed in Satellite, a Mexico City suburb, with a student named Victor.

"We went visiting for the church and held church services," he said.

"Church was different there. It started when it started, and ended when it ended. There was no time frame, and all the churches had a pinata."

Lucas said one of his memorable moments is of standing on a roof top holding one end of a pinata's rope.

"But they don't hold candy," he said. "They hold vegetables, fruits and sugar cane."

Rachelle Rollins, a sophomore mental health and human services major, said some of the pinatas she saw had a few pieces of candy in them.

Rollins, who stayed in the suburb of Izcalt with the family of a senator in the Mexican Congress, said she was the only one on the trip who slept under an electric blanket.

Rollins, who said the trip left her with a sense of peace, worked in a mission church leading a puppet ministry and other children's activities.

"It feels good that I didn't spend Christmas break just sitting around," Scheurman said. "I was able to help someone, and anyone can do that, not just Baptists. Habitat is non-denominational. It's for anyone who wants to help, even atheists."

Each student who went raised his or her own funds, and each gave a gift of $50 to pay for a house, Howerton said.

"Finally, the student will need to answer certain medical questions in order to participate. These questions are basically if your doctor says you can go."

If literature is not enough for the student, the scenery may sell them. Dave Elder, a professor at Chase College of Law, owns a "country inn" five hours outside of Dublin.

"It is a country with incredible opportunities for literary study," Elder said. "It is an opportunity to take part in culture that has had a dramatic impact in literature."
