What bugs secretaries the most about their bosses? According to a survey, these are some of the most common complaints. . .

- The boss who keeps his or her secretary overtime without previous notice.
- The boss who dawdles around until five p.m., then decides to begin the day's dictation.
- The boss who marks up work that could be corrected, or slashes a line through a four-page letter because one word is incorrectly spelled.
- The boss who hovers over a secretary while she is typing, pointing out errors before she has had a chance to notice them herself.
- The boss who never appreciates what is done--who takes good work for granted.
