Amy Falk takes time out to be crowned new queen

by Karen Merk
Staff Reporter

Less than 24 hours after being crowned NKU's 1984-85 Homecoming Queen, Amy Falk was doing something pretty routine: laundry.

"You should have seen me last night," she said during an informal interview next to the whirring washing machines in the Residence Halls laundry room. "I was studying at 3:00 in the morning.

"I was so nervous all day yesterday [Saturday]. I couldn't study. And I have four tests this week, so I had to sometime."

But is Falk always this laid back?

"I don't know," she said with a laugh. "I guess..."

Falk was crowned at 10 p.m. Saturday at the Homecoming dance, held at Town and Country restaurant in Ft. Wright. The other four finalists for the honor were Terri Childress, Tina Knight, Celisa Melton and Kim Schneider.

Falk, who was sponsored by the NKU Varsity Club, extended a special thanks to the organization. "They did a whole lot to support me," she said. "They were just great and I really appreciate it."

Falk also is on the NKU women's basketball team and is a member of Delta Zeta sorority.

So, how does it feel to be the university's Homecoming Queen?

"It feels great," Falk said. "I was just kind of in a dream world last night. I don't think I even realized I won until this morning, when I saw all those roses sitting there..."

Policy, qualifications questioned by McMain

by Kim Colley
Staff Reporter

Should a student have to attend a class every day when a professor is basically just lecturing from the textbook? How qualified are the part-time instructors at Northern?

These are a couple of issues, brought up by Student Government representatives, that SG President Keith McMain is looking into.

"The current attendance policy is really too vague," McMain said at last Monday's SG meeting.

The 1984-85 Student Handbook states: "Students may not be penalized with a lowered grade solely on the basis of non-attendance unless class participation is clearly essential to the goals of the course." It also says that students must be told of the professor's individual attendance policy by the second class day.

McMain wants the term "participation" clearly defined.

"Daily attendance shouldn't be required if, like in some 100- or 200-level course, the teacher is lecturing straight from the text," McMain said. In such cases, he said, a teacher shouldn't be allowed to lower someone's grade just because he or she missed a certain number of class meetings.

Women's Center offers support and information

by Denise Taul
News Editor

The NKU Women's Center is a support organization for females looking for counseling, general information, services or programs connected with Northern.

The center offers women a place to study and talk with others. It is also a referral service.

We've had a number of people walk in looking for counseling or information on Women's Studies courses, said Linda Baumen, the center's secretary.

Afternoon and evening support groups are beginning to meet on a regular basis to discuss and explore feminist issues on and off campus.

The evening group was filled the first day, said Director Pat Dolan, a social work professor. A Monday afternoon group is still open and anyone interested is encouraged to call the center, she said.

Tony Mazzaro, an assistant professor of social work, is planning a weekly videotaped movie dealing with women's issues. "Shoot the Moon," "Frances," and "Heart Like a Wheel" are some tapes scheduled to be shown to the public.

Terri Harold, a full-time student, IRS employee and mother of two, said, "I need to meet other returning students and make new friends. I hope the Women's Center will help NKU address some issues like babysitting facilities."

Nita Winters uses the center as an early morning haven before her morning classes. "It's nice to come here, get coffee and have a quiet place to read over my class assignments," said Winters.

A newsletter, containing information on community and campus related activities, will be used as a networking tool for suggestions and problem solving, educational information and creative expression.

The staff encourages submissions of articles, artwork and calendar data.

The Women's Center is open from 8:15 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. It is located in room 206 of the A.D. Albright Health Center. For further information, call 572-6497.

McMain is also concerned about the qualifications of part-time instructors.

According to Cindy Dickens, executive assistant to the president for student affairs, the requirements for part-time faculty are "a terminal degree and experience in the field." A terminal degree, in most cases, is a doctorate. But in some cases a master's degree is all that is required, she said.

Part-time instructors' student evaluations after their first semester should be more carefully scrutinized, McMain said, with special attention being paid to students' specific complaints. This way, the teachers doing an unsatisfactory job could be weeded out, he said.

McMain and the SG University Affairs committee plan to meet with Provost Lyle Gray and the Council of Deans within the next two weeks to discuss these issues and what changes, if any, should be made.

Student welfare aided by Reagan

To the editor:

This year the American voter will choose between two diametrically opposed visions of leadership of what America should be. President Reagan and his party look to our people and see a new dawn of the American spirit, while Walter Mondale looks at our nation and offers redistribution instead of expansion, contraction instead of growth and despair instead of hope.

In all areas of both domestic and foreign relations President Reagan has demonstrated the boldness of vision, the optimism for our future, and the confidence in the American people that can transform human lives and the life of a nation to a destiny of prosperity. President Reagan not only meets, but exceeds, the American people's expectations of leadership.

Today, all across America, young people are rallying behind the President and his policies. In poll after poll Ronald Reagan consistently runs strongest among college and post-college age voters. This group of Americans wants a society of opportunity, not a welfare state. They want government to foster an environment in which individuals can develop their potential without hindrance. These individuals support the President's efforts to renew the federal system, to strengthen the states and return power to the people. They realize that this course is the secret to our common goal of a free and just society.

President Reagan's leadership is building an economy which creates more jobs for everyone including those wanting to escape poverty. Under President Reagan's leadership, we have rebuilt our national defenses, gained respect among nations because of the President's firm, coherent foreign policy, and established a plan for economic recovery that is working. Americans are better off now than they were four years ago.

Poor timing hinders Homecoming spirit

Repetition is the seedling of boredom.

Nobody important said that — I made it up myself. But, while profundity is admittedly not one of my strong points, that little statement might just be the key to the low turnout at the Homecoming Dance Saturday night.

First, though, I should say that I might be the only person who thinks the turnout was low. Cindy Dickens, for example, told me she was surprised at how good it was. And she should know. Her position allows her to gain inside information on these matters. A student like me wouldn't have access to it. (She is Executive Assistant to the President for Student Affairs, which is a very long title meaning Person Who Takes Student Concerns Directly To The Top And Usually Gets Results.")

I guess I'm overly optimistic. I heard the talk. But I brushed off the early pessimism. "This is Homecoming." I thought, "Of course people will go." I was wrong.

And that brings me back to my "repetition" theory.

The people one might expect to get excited about Homecoming — the sorority and fraternity members — just had Greek Formal a month ago. I'm not exaggerating when I say that probably twice as many people went to Greek Formal as Homecoming. That's sad.

I'm not knocking Greeks — I am one. I'm knocking the proverbial "powers that be" who scheduled Homecoming.

More accurately, it's the "powers that were." Because the bright idea to move Homecoming from its traditional January date came from a temporary staff member who knew she wouldn't be around to catch hell if it got as little support as "Republicans for Mondale."

In short, the timing was wrong. Perhaps if somebody had thought far enough ahead to pick up on the fact that Homecoming was scheduled smack dab in the middle of the semester (hint: killer midterm time), or if somebody had realized that few students have money for two big dances in a month, the hoopla would have been bigger.

It's a shame, really. I went and had a great time, as did most of my friends. The band was good, the hall (at Town and Country Restaurant) was nice, and planning — except for the asinine scheduling — was apparently well executed.

I guess I should be glad the dance was as well-attended as it was. Still, I think it could have been better.

Let's give Homecoming back to the basketball team and schedule it for January again next year.

Democrats support Mulloy

To the editor:

We, the Young Democrats of NKU, give and strongly urge full support from everyone to vote on Nov. 6 for Pat Mulloy, Democrat for U.S. Congress, 4th District, state of Kentucky.

Pat Mulloy will be a full-time representative for us in Washington, not a part-time one. And Pat Mulloy will not resort to profiteering while in Congress. Gene Snyder, his opponent, became a millionaire while in office.

Pat Mulloy will be a leader for us, not a follower as Mr. Snyder has been. Pat Mulloy will also represent us here in Northern Kentucky, as well as Jefferson County. Mr. Snyder just represents political action committees and other such special-interest groups.

Pat Mulloy will also be here at NKU Oct. 24 and 25. This is something Mr. Snyder has never done. Wednesday and Thursday, 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Pat will talk to you. Ask him anything, he'll answer you truthfully, not beat around the bush.

As Young Democrats, we are part of today's youth. And as you know, today's youth will be tomorrow's leaders. And Pat Mulloy is one of those leaders.

Fulbright Scholar is a first

by Steve Roha
Staff Reporter

It's another first for Northern Kentucky University.

Northern has been awarded the services of a Fulbright Scholar for the first time ever.

Dr. Jose Escorcía, one of 16 Latin American professors awarded Fulbright fellowships this year, is teaching Latin American history and politics at Northern.

Escorcía, a faculty member at the Universidad Del Valle in Cali, Colombia, arrived at Northern in August.

Escorcía is not unfamiliar with the United States. He earned a Ph.D. in history at the University of California San Diego in 1975 and has previously been involved in the Fulbright program.

He said he likes to travel, especially in connection with his research.

"I like to do much reading in my field," he said. "Traveling to other universities provides an opportunity to research in other places."

At the Universidad Del Valle, Escorcía is expected to do a lot of research.

"The support for the research there allowed the faculty to become prominent in their own field," he said. "That helped me to gain recognition. That way, I became known among my colleagues in this country. They recommended me for the Fulbright award, which is considered a high distinction."

Escorcía had never even heard of Northern before receiving word that the university wanted him as a Fulbright Scholar. But since his arrival, his impressions of Northern have been favorable.

"I have a good impression of the students here," he said. "They seem to be highly motivated in the two classes that I teach."

As one might expect, Cali and Highland Heights are a bit different.

"The biggest difference is that in Colombia, people meet more outside socially," Escorcía said. "After work, people eat in open-air cafes. Here, most social life is inside."

Mary Carol Moses, assistant director of International Studies and instructor of anthropology, said Northern applied for the Fulbright Scholarship with little hope of getting it.

"But we said that we would share Professor Escorcía with all of Cincinnati, and so we received the award," Moses said.

In addition to the award's prestige, Moses said the Fulbright program would benefit the university in several ways.

"I think that this award is recognition that NKU is a growing institution," Moses said. "The award is a prestigious one and a first for NKU."

I find it hard to study and hop bars on the same weekend. Could this be caused by a disorder in my limbic system? Would a lobotomy help?

— Betty Franks, junior
Accounting major

A common problem that involves a very important activity — hopping bars.

It's true. The weekend is never long enough and if you're like me, you only lying to yourself when you plan to study and party within such a short period of time. You're in college now and you're expected to make responsible adult-like decisions. You must learn to use and plan your time more wisely.

Make a choice! Either you're gonna study or party! Take a stand! And unless you can take your books to the bar, you're gonna have to make a choice.

Here are some suggestions that have worked for me in the past:

- Burn yourself up like a workaholic all week long to get done studying by Friday afternoon. Then you can hop bars all weekend long just like the Easter bunny on speed.

- Or vice-versa. Party all week long, barely making it to class each day. Then spend the weekend recuperating, while you catch up on a week's worth of homework.

- Or study and party in long binges, but never do the two together.

- Or you can party constantly if you keep a friend in the registrar's office on your bar tab.

These are just a few ideas. The solutions are infinite, so I suggest you give this part of your question some long, sober thought.

I'm no scientist and I'll never claim to be one. I'm not sure what the limbic system is, and I couldn't find anyone who could tell me. But I do believe it's important to consult a doctor or even a neurosurgeon when considering any type of brain surgery.

According to Dr. Torango, The Northerner's food, health and science editor, lobotomies are definitely no longer chic.

"When considering the expensive cost and time involved, a lobotomy is just not worth it," Dr. Torango explained. "Today it's much more fashionable to seek professional, psychological advice if you can afford it. Besides, those silly birds can never really tell what's going to happen later after they raise the blade and go in under the skull."

Dr. Torango also described a cheap, at-home method for those of you intent on trying to solve this problem medically.

With an easy to obtain 12-volt car battery and an inexpensive set of jumper cables, anyone can benefit from simple, do-it-yourself, electro-shock therapy. Just attach two clamps to the battery posts, and touch the opposite ends of the cables to your temples. It's also advisable to apply a spare amount of skin conditioner or salve to your temples before and after each shock.

Well I gotta go. Thanks for your question, Betty, and if any more of you zombies want free advice from a fellow student, drunkard and dude, write: Letters to Johnny Zombie, The Northerner, U.C. 210 NKU, Highland Heights, Ky. 41076.

Lily Tomlin puts heart and soul in new comedy with Steve Martin

by Tom Robinson
Staff Reporter

Steve Martin and Lily Tomlin are two names synonymous with comedy. In recent years, though, both have strayed from their comedic roots and lost some of their appeal. They currently are starring together in the comedy, All of Me, and have redeemed themselves.

All of Me is a good and funny movie with hilarious moments. The storyline goes like this: Edwina Cutwater, played by Lily Tomlin, is a wealthy woman who has been an invalid all her life. She decides to have her soul transferred into the body of another woman, so she can do the things she always wanted to do.

Steve Martin plays Roger Cobb, an average attorney at a big-name law firm, who plays, unpaid, in a jazz band at night. He has just turned 38 (the movie opens on his birthday) and has decided to straighten up and make something of himself.

An Indian guru named Praha Lasa, played by Richard Libertini, is hired by Edwina to transfer her soul into the lovely young body of Terry Hoskins, played by Victoria Tennant. The trouble begins when Edwina's soul is accidentally transferred to Roger when the spiritual bowl which holds her soul falls out a window and hits Roger on the head. Edwina had amended her will to leave all her money to Terry, so when Edwina ends up in Roger instead of Terry, trouble and comedy result.

Lily Tomlin as the wealthy, scheming Edwina Cutwater.

Steve Martin is especially funny in the movie. He carries most of the show because he must act out both Roger Cobb's and Edwina Cutwater's characters and movements. He controls the left side of his body and she controls the right. There is a bathroom scene and a couple of sex scenes which are especially funny because of this predicament. Martin's physical movements are the key to his performance, as much as the changing personalities.

Richard Libertini also turns in a funny performance as the Indian guru. Even though he speaks only a few words, they are all hilarious. The exchanges between him and Martin and his reactions to the telephone are especially funny.

At first sight, All of Me might seem to be a corny movie. But it isn't. It's genuinely funny and entertaining.

Steve Martin plays Roger Cobb, half-possessed by Edwina Cutwater's spirit.

WRFN turns on in halls

by Hunter Hoeffcker
Northerner Contributor

WRFN, Northern Kentucky University's campus radio station, held its grand opening celebration last Monday, Oct. 15, to commemorate and promote its new availability in the residence halls.

President Leon Boothe was on hand for the ribbon-cutting ceremony as well as others from the Communications Department and the Alumni Association.

"This was made possible by a grant from the Alumni Association," said Jerry Cavanaugh, WRFN general manager. "They donated $6,500 which also paid for the new equipment, including a new production studio."

Cavanaugh said that the residence halls were able to participate in the festivities.

"We gave away cokes to the residence students," he said. "I think they now realize that WRFN is conveniently available to them."

"It's been a long time coming but thanks to the Alumni Association and other faculty members, we can offer residence hall students a form of entertainment and an opportunity for some real input as far as what they want to hear from their campus radio station."

Cavanaugh said future expansion of WRFN includes the A.D. Albright Health Center and possibly the lounges in other buildings on campus.

WRFN is available in the University Center and on 810 AM in the residence halls.

Toddlers taking advantage of Early Childhood Center

by Tahani Nabi
Staff Reporter

If you think the youngest student at Northern is a 15-year-old Latin School graduate, you're wrong. It's 3-year-old Martin Bower.

Along with 37 other children ranging in age from 3 to 5, Martin attends the Early Childhood Center on the first floor of the Business, Education and Psychology building.

Originally the center was a nursery and lab for students in child development classes. Three years ago it was expanded to include a child care program open to anyone interested, with students getting first preference.

Staff at the center includes Edwina Miller, a certified instructor who works full-time as the center's director, and another instructor who works part-time.

Because of its multiple functions, the center is beneficial to the children, parents and students.

The center provides the children in the daycare center and nursery school with educational programs, snacks, stories, playtime and nap-time.

And it is a convenient place for parents to leave their children in good hands while the parents take classes or work.

For students in certain psychology and education classes, the center provides a laboratory for studying the development of youngsters.

The center also sponsors speeches and lectures on child care. Starting Oct. 30, there will be a series of lectures, the first dealing with child abuse.

For students with children in the program, rates are $50 a week for five full days, $7 for a single half day (7:45 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.) and $14 for a single full day (7:45 a.m. to 5 p.m.).

Non-student rates are a bit higher. For more information about the Early Childhood Center contact Edwina Miller at 572-5217.

Transition has coach wondering

by Dave Mendell
Staff Reporter

There is a major question facing NKU soccer coach Paul Rockwood and the rest of his team.

If it is having trouble winning in the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics (NAIA) this year, how is it going to win in the NCAA next year?

Soccer

"If we are funded correctly, we can win," said Rockwood.

But what if they are not?

"Then we get killed," he replied.

By funding, Rockwood means the money to recruit more new players. He feels that this year was a strong recruiting year, but next year must be even better if they are to be competitive in the NCAA.

Rockwood likes the idea of moving into the NCAA and is eager to play some of the best teams in the country. He has just one problem with the NCAA — he feels that post-season playoff berths are not determined fairly.

"In the NCAA, it is determined subjectively, rather than on the field where it should be," said Rockwood.

Overall, he is in favor of the move up. He feels that this will help school support of the team, which according to Rockwood, has not been good.

"Earlier in the year, no one (fans) was out there. Now that we're almost 8-8 (currently 6-8), some people have shown up. Nobody likes a loser," he said.

Scott Scanlon maneuvers through the Thomas More defense in Saturday's Homecoming exhibition match which Northern won, 4-3.

Winning may be hard to come by next year, though. If Rockwood gets the schedule he wants, Northern will be playing some of the best teams in the country, including Davis-Elkins, Oakland and Parkside.

Earlier in the year, NKU lost to two top NCAA teams, Davis-Elkins and West Virginia Wesleyan. NKU dropped both games 7-0. These teams were included on the schedule this year as a warm up, of sorts, for next year.

"If we can win, it would be great for the school. But if we are (going to win), the players better work this winter and be ready to play," Rockwood said.

Black and blue Campbell no longer green in the net

by Dave Mendell
Staff Reporter

Fresh out of high school, Rob Campbell is now the starting goalie on NKU's soccer team.

After junior Scott Dunacjik was declared academically ineligible, Campbell inherited the starting spot. And coach Paul Rockwood said he has matured well.

"Rob is coming on strong," Rockwood said. "It is pleasing to see the progress he has made."

Campbell, however, did have trouble adjusting from high school to college soccer. In the first three games of the season, Campbell allowed 19 goals. But senior forward Alan Grothaus said Campbell doesn't deserve all the blame.

"It wasn't all his fault," Grothaus said. "We had to make a few adjustments in our defense."

Also, NKU started the season opposing teams that were nationally ranked, making Campbell's transition that much more difficult.

"Rob saw some of the best teams in the country earlier," said senior fullback Kevin Cieply. "Now he is maturing."

Campbell seems to have settled into the job. He registered his first college shutout recently against Berea College and has since recorded two more.

"At first it was rough," Campbell said. "In college the game is played much harder and the tackling is tougher. But I feel I'm improving now."

Rockwood likes what he sees in Campbell and feels the new goalkeeper has handled the pressure well, considering that he is only a freshman.

"Rob has good technique and he has been able to put it into game situations," Rockwood said.

Off the field, Campbell is softspoken and somewhat shy. But he is different when the game begins.

"All freshmen are a little shy," Rockwood said. "But Rob can let it go when he has to."

Grothaus agreed.

"Off the field, Rob is laid back. But on the field, he is just like every player," he said.

Bright future awaits Klein

by Julie Schlarman
Staff Reporter

Despite finishing 2-12, the NKU women's tennis team is remaining hopeful for next year.

The team was defeated in its final matches by Morehead State, 9-0; Transylvania, 7-2, and Xavier, 6-3.

Tennis

Illness and injury played major factors in the outcome of the season. The early season loss of sophomore Holly Hanna because of mononucleosis was a setback for the team.

"With Holly out we were forced to move up in position. Sometimes we had to play over our heads. Holly would have helped," said sophomore netter Kim Burchett.

Coach Roger Klein concurred.

"Holly is a fine tennis player. I am hoping to red shirt her," Klein said.

Red shirting Hanna is a possibility because she played in only one match.

Even without Hanna the team's finish may be misleading. "A lot of the matches we lost were really close. There were five or six matches we lost by only one game," Burchett said.

The team remains hopeful for next season because all of the players, with the exception of senior Elena Escamilla, will be returning with two or more years left.

Winter practice is essential for the team to do well in the spring exhibition matches.

"There's enough desire and good college tennis competition over the spring and summer. They know that they have to work to do well," Klein said.

The acceptance into the Great Lakes Valley Conference should prove helpful to the team since they will be competing against teams who are also on the NCAA Division II level.

"It isn't easy to hold a team together when you play Division I schools like Morehead. Morale is hard to keep up," Klein said.

Norsemen come back to win homecoming

Over the weekend, the Norse soccer team defeated Thomas More in a homecoming exhibition match, 4-3.

As for the game itself, it was a see-saw battle before Thomas More took a 3-2 lead before the end of the first half.

Norse coach Paul Rockwood felt that his team was never mentally in the game because it didn't count on the record.

"We played like we came out to stroll around," said Rockwood. "Thomas More came out ready to play."

The Norse came back to tie the game on a goal by Scott Scanlon midway through the third quarter.

With ten minutes left in the game, Bill Bryce scored a goal to give Northern (6-8) a 4-3 victory.

Powerful Holford gives team added strength

by Amy Simmons
Staff Reporter

When Debbie Holford signed with Northern Kentucky University last year to play softball, she had no idea that she would end up starting for the volleyball team.

Volleyball

Holford, a 5-foot-8 sophomore from Cleves, Ohio, was playing basketball in Regents Hall when some volleyball players wanted to know if she was interested in playing for the team.

And one year later, the North Bend Taylor High School graduate has shown her athleticism in the form of hard, aggressive play on the volleyball floor this season.

Holford, who played four years of volleyball at Taylor, knows that injuries have allowed her to play on an unfamiliar level.

"There are a lot of technical things I don't know, but I'm taking it one game at a time," she said.

Her competitive spirit quietly runs deep.

"I put more pressure on myself now because I want to stay there (starting)," Holford said.

"Deb has a great deal of potential despite never playing at the college level," said coach Jane Meier.

Debbie Holford

Meier said that Holford has relied on her fine athletic ability, allowing her to become a "powerful attack player."

But both know that there is much for a rookie to learn about the game.

Meier feels Holford's greatest asset is her understated strength compared to most players.

She is strong, without the look of strength.

However, Holford is here to play softball.

She was a key member of the highly rated Sweeney Chevrolet youth softball team. This Cincinnati-based power plays during the summer in the tougher women's leagues.

Holford finished her career with Sweeney and is looking forward to playing with other teams.

Holford knows the best is yet to come and possesses the intense desire to do so.

She said modestly of the high level competition, "I know I can play."

Lady Norse rebound for two victories

On a positive note for the Norse women's volleyball team, Jennifer Huber, last year's high school player of the year from Our Lady of Angels in Cincinnati, is back in the starting lineup.

Huber, a tough hitter and server, had been out with a sprained ankle. Her return helped the team to two wins over the weekend after it had floundered somewhat of late.

Over the weekend, the Lady Norse took two matches — defeating Ashland College 13-15, 15-13, 11-15, 15-10, 15-12, and Slippery Rock State College, 15-5, 15-4, 15-7.

Before that, the Lady Norse came in second in the Wright State Invitational.

The Norse won three out of five matches in the tournament, which consisted of teams from around the Great Lakes Region. The two losses, to powerhouses Indiana-Purdue Fort Wayne and Wright State, were close matches.

Before the tournament was over, however, the Norse came back to defeat Wright State, 9-15, 15-13, 15-12. Other Norse victories came over Walsh College and Northern Michigan.

"We fared well in a very competitive situation and had the chance to win," said coach Jane Meier.

On Wednesday, the Norse lost to Mount St. Joseph, 15-10, 16-14, 15-8. Meier, who felt her team was "physically tired," wanted to regroup her team before playing Division I Butler on Friday.

However, the Norse didn't regroup enough, losing to the Lady Bulldogs, 6-15, 15-7, 15-8, 15-12.

To do well in post-season play, the volleyball team must start to play and win consistently, besides keeping healthy. They've had chances most of the season to put some impressive wins together, only to have breakdowns here and there.

The Lady Norse will play their next game Friday against Kentucky State in Regents Hall.

The fearless one hath returned after a short two-week respite.

This week's victim, Northerner Managing Editor Tony Nienaber, will fare little better. Like the Mildcats, Mr. Manager doesn't stand a chance with the fearless one.
